Rebuttal of presumption of resulting trust. It has been held that the evidence to rebut a presumption of a resulting trust need not be as strong as the evidence to create a resulting trust,⁵ and that the quantum and character of evidence required to rebut a presumption of a resulting trust are that required to establish any other disputed fact.⁶ So, where it is admitted that the alleged cestui que trust

furnished the consideration, but the dispute is as to whether a gift was intended, it has been held that it is not necessary that the evidence be clear, precise, and indubitable, the weight of the evidence which satisfies the chancellor being sufficient.⁷ On the other hand, it has been held that where it is sought to rebut a presumption of a resulting trust the proof to rebut such presumption must be strong and clear,⁸ or clear and convincing,⁹ and evidence which is vague or ambiguous is insufficient.¹⁰

Ineffective attempt to create express trust. The rule requiring clear, cogent, and convincing evidence has been held not to apply to a resulting trust which arises by reason of indefiniteness and uncertainty of an express trust.¹¹

The existence of a resulting trust in a particular case is ordinarily a question of fact.

C. CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS

§ 139. Basis and Elements

- a. In general
- b. Fraud or inequitable conduct as essential element
- c. Fraud at inception of title

a. In General

Constructive trusts are creatures of equity, lacking the attributes of true trusts, which arise by operation of law rather than by virtue of agreement or intention, for the purpose of working out right and justice and preventing fraud.

A constructive trust is a creature of equity,¹⁶ defined supra § 15 as a remedial device by which the holder of legal title is held to be a trustee for the benefit of another who in good conscience is entitled to the beneficial interest. So, the doctrine of constructive trust is an instrument of equity for the maintenance of justice, good faith, and good conscience,¹⁷ resting on a sound public policy requiring that the law should not become the instrument of designing persons to be used for the purpose of fraud.¹⁸ In this respect constructive trusts have been said to arise through the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel,¹⁹ or under the broad doctrine that equity regards and treats as done what in good conscience ought to be done.²⁰

A constructive trust lacks the attributes of a true trust,²¹ that is, it has none of the elements of an express trust,²² and is not a fiduciary relationship,²³ but it is a fiction imposed as an equitable device for achieving justice.²⁴ The feature which distinguishes constructive trusts from express trusts and resulting trusts is that the former do not arise by virtue of agreement or intention, either actual or implied, but by operation of law,²⁵ or, more ac-

Products of conduct

(1) Implied and constructive trusts are not created by agreement and are not the results of agreement, express or implied, but are products of conduct, in which it is not necessary that cestui que trust have any part or knowledge but in respect to which the law imputes an intention to the actor and the obligation to do equity when called on to do so, irrespective of whether actor had any such intention—Rimmer v. Austin, 4 So.2d 224, 191 Miss. 664.

(2) Constructive trusts depend for their existence on wrongful conduct of defendant causing unjust enrichment, and not on the intent of parties.—Brophy v. Cities Service Co., 70 A.2d 5, 31 Del.Ch. 241—Greenly v. Greenly, 49 A.2d 126, 29 Del.Ch. 297.

Device

A constructive trust does not depend on an enforceable agreement to hold property as a trustee but is imposed against the will of the person sought to be held as a trustee as a device employed by courts of equity to get at a wrongdoer—Deep Oil Development Co. v. Constructive or involuntary trust

The trust which is imposed on trustee ex maleficio is a constructive or involuntary trust because equity, for purpose of working out justice in most efficient manner, creates trust relationship notwithstanding parties do not intend to create a trust, and equity regards the person who was guilty of such wrongful conduct as a trustee ex maleficio, and holds him to the duty and liability of a trustee with respect to the subject matter in order to prevent him from profiting from his own wrong.—Cordovano v. State, 7 S.E.2d 45, 61 Ga.App. 590.

Where there has been no explicit language used in instruments purporting to create a trust, courts in exercise of their equitable powers will infer from what parties did or said that a trust was intended and such trusts are commonly known as constructive or resulting trusts—Miller v. Donald, Tex. Civ. App., 235 S.W.2d 201, error refused no reversible error.

Other statements of rule

(1) Constructive trust arises although there is no express or implied, written or verbal declaration or intention to raise a trust, where legal title to property is obtained by violation of duty to one equitably entitled thereto, and where property thus obtained is held in hostility to such person's beneficial rights of ownership—Kelly v. Davis, 188 S.E. 853, 211 N.C. 1.

(2) A constructive trust does not, like an express trust, arise because of manifestation of intention to create it, but is imposed as a remedy to prevent unjust enrichment.

Words not necessary

A constructive trust is not created by any words, either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but by the construction of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice—Murray County v. Pickering, 26 S.E.2d 287, 196 Ga. 208.

the purpose of preventing unjust enrichment.³² No trust arises, however, in favor of a person participating in fraudulent or reprehensible transactions.³³ Such trusts are remedial in character,³⁴ and are classified as belonging to remedial rather than substantive law.³⁵

It follows that a constructive trust may result from actual or constructive fraud or from some equitable principle independent of fraud,³⁶ and if one person obtains the legal title to property, not only by fraud, or by violation of confidence, or of fiduciary relations, but in any other unconscientious manner, so that he cannot equitably retain the property which really belongs to another, equity will impress a constructive trust on the property in favor

Remedial institution

A constructive trust is a remedial institution as distinguished from substantive, the latter being typically exemplified by an express trust.—

Kerber v. Rowe, 156 S.W.2d 925, 348 Mo. 1125.

Restitution

A basic constituent of constructive trust is restitution of the property of the cestui que trust with which the property, which is the subject of the trust, has been acquired.—Meillette v. Hudstan Oil Corp., Tex.Civ.App., 243 S.W.2d 438, error refused no reversible error.

Title or lien

A constructive trust is not a title to, or lien on, property but a mere remedy to which equity resorts in granting relief against fraud, and does not exist so as to affect property held by wrongdoer until it is declared by a court of equity as a means of affording relief.—*International Refugee Organization v. Honesty and fair dealing

(1) A trust is implied whenever circumstances are such that the person taking the legal estate, whether by fraud or otherwise, cannot enjoy beneficial interest without violating rules of honesty and fair dealing.—McGann v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 89 A.2d 123, 117 Vt. 179.

(2) Constructive trusts will be considered as comprising those cases where a court of equity finds that defendant holds a property interest unfairly as against complainant, but not under an express or resulting trust.—Seaton v. Webb, 38 S.E.2d 654, 208 S.C. 453.

raising of a trust is necessary to prevent a failure of justice,⁴⁰ and the statement of this rule in Corpus Juris has been referred to as an accurate definition of the broad doctrine of constructive trusts.⁴¹

It is not necessary to the establishment of a constructive trust that any express or conventional trust relationship shall exist between the parties,⁴² or that any promise shall have been made by the one for the benefit of the other.⁴³ Where a trust ex maleficio is based on a promise, the promise need not be expressly made, since actual co-operation or silent acquiescence may have the same effect.⁴⁴ Ordinarily, the inducement, irrespective of the number of promises, is the test in determining the creation of a constructive trust.⁴⁵ The fact that a balance on general account is due to a trustee ex maleficio from the beneficiary does not affect the existence of the trust.⁴⁶ It has been said that a constructive trust does not arise until the cestui que trust elects to assert it;⁴⁷ and the right to assert it comes to an end when the property in question is conveyed to the cestui que trust by the alleged trustee,⁴⁸ or when other property is accepted by the

cestui in lieu of that to which he is entitled.⁴⁹

The doctrine of constructive trust is not confined to cases where title to real estate is involved.⁵⁰ The principles on which constructive trusts are imposed are equally applicable to the acquisition or holding of property under testamentary devises and bequests and under transfers or dispositions not testamentary in character,⁵¹ and to purchases at judicial sales and purchases at private sales.⁵² A court of equity in decreeing a constructive trust is bound by no unyielding formula as the equity of the transaction must shape the measure of relief.⁵³ Courts will go far to find a trust in order to protect a party from the inequitable conduct of an assignee or grantee.⁵⁴ The fact that a court of equity will decree a constructive trust in property obtained by fraud or purchased with funds obtained by fraud does not mean that the title of the owner is defective or his possession tortious.⁵⁵

Res or specific fund. It is necessary that there be a res or specific fund on which the trust may be fixed.⁵⁶

Revocation. Although a contract with respect to property may create an equitable trust in some third person, it may be revoked by the parties to it without the consent of the third person, dependent on the nature of the right in which he is to be benefited and the extent of the benefits thus conferred, even though it is apparent that it is intended at least in part directly and immediately for his benefit.⁵⁷ A trust arising from the delivery of a check to the payee to be used for a certain purpose has been held revoked by the death of the maker

after payment of the check has been refused for insufficient funds.⁵⁸

b. Fraud or Inequitable Conduct as Essential Element

Some fraudulent or unfair and unconscionable conduct rendering it inequitable for the trustee to retain absolute title is essential to create a constructive trust.

It has been broadly held that fraud, actual or constructive, is an essential element in the creation or existence of a constructive trust,⁵⁹ although

(5) An involuntary trust must be predicated on acquisition of property which is impressed with a trust knowing that it is so impressed, or on wrongful acquisition of trust res under such circumstances that equitable principles create a trust—Cook v. Cook, 111 P.2d 322, 17 Cal.2d 639

Transactions cannot lightly be set aside on chancellor's arbitrary or capricious view that proceeding was unfair, but fraudulent conduct which demands correction or frustration through equity must be substantial, tangible, and of definite import, and must strike at root of the transaction—Atkinson v. Atkinson, 33 S.E.2d 666, 235 N.C. 120.

Knowledge of wrongdoing

(1) The basis of constructive trusts is knowledge of wrongdoing, which knowledge may be inherent in situation as in cases of constructive trusts imposed on malefactors, or it may be based on notice as where a party has received a res innocently, and after notice, refuses to return it or make restitution for it—Bradford v. Chase Nat. Bank of City of New York, D.C.N.Y., 24 F.Supp. 28, affirmed, C.C.A., *Berger v. Chase Nat. (2) In order to amount to fraudulent misappropriation of partnership funds, giving rise to constructive trust, employee taking them with partner's consent must have known or been legally chargeable with knowledge of such partner's want of authority—Iffeuer v. Haas, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 111, error dismissed.

Dissatisfaction with contract

When parties have reduced their contract to writing, so its meaning strictly speaking, constructive trusts have no element of fraud in them, the court merely using the machinery of a trust to afford redress in cases of fraud.⁶⁰ More precisely, some fraudulent or unfair and unconscionable conduct is essential to create a constructive trust,⁶¹ and there must be some unjust enrichment on the part of the trustee by something passing from the beneficiary or from some one else on the beneficiary's behalf,⁶² and no such trust arises where there are no circumstances which make it inequitable for one to hold absolute title to property against another.⁶³ As otherwise expressed, in order to establish a constructive trust, there must be some element of fraud, either positive or constructive, which existed at the time of the transaction and which influenced the cestui que trust, or there must exist a confidential relationship and undue influence by virtue of which a person has obtained legal title to property which he ought not in equity and good conscience, hold and enjoy.⁶⁴ However, actual⁶⁵ or intentional can be plainly understood, a dissatisfied party cannot later, by alleging a different understanding was had between parties before written contract was entered into, change transaction into a constructive trust—Evans v. Berko, 97 N.E.2d 316, 408 Ill. 438.

Theory

A suit to fasten a constructive trust on the defendant must proceed on theory that he has title to something which he cannot in good conscience hold against the plaintiff.—*Alburn v. A constructive trust, being a remedial device raised by equity court so as to reach a wrongdoer, will not be raised in absence of a compelling equity.—Gates v. Coquat, Tex Civ App., 210 S.W.2d 614.

fraud⁶⁶ is not an essential element of a constructive trust, and inequitable conduct short of fraud may cause equity to impose such a trust.⁶⁷ So, a constructive trust may be imposed to prevent unjust enrichment,⁶⁸ without regard to actual fraud,⁶⁹ and there may be a constructive trust where retention of property or beneficial interest would constitute an unconscionable advantage to the holder of the legal title, even though its acquisition was not wrongful,⁷⁰ and irrespective of detriment, injury or damage to the person benefited by the trust.⁷¹

c. Fraud at Inception of Title

Fraud or other wrongdoing warranting the imposition of a constructive trust must exist at the inception of title to the property, or inhere in the transaction by which the trustee acquires the title, and fraudulent acts or omissions subsequent to the acquisition of title and not connected therewith do not give rise to a constructive trust.

In order that fraud or other wrongdoing may give rise to a constructive trust, it must exist at the inception of title to the property, or inhere in the transaction by which the trustee acquires the title,⁷² and fraudulent acts or omissions subsequent to the acquisition of title and not connected therewith do not give rise to a constructive trust.⁷³ So, a constructive trust ordinarily cannot grow out of the mere violation of a declaration or agreement of trust, whether implied or express, written or verbal,⁷⁴ or from a violation of, or refusal to, perform

Wrongful deposit

Fact that trust company as trustee under trust deed violated express trust imposed on it by trust deed in depositing trust funds in banking department of trust company with a promise to, or agreement with, the person seeking to establish the trust to convey property to him,⁷⁵ or from mere failure to pay the purchase money for property conveyed,⁷⁶ although where the circumstances are such that a constructive trust would arise in the absence of any agreement, the existence of such an agreement will not prevent a trust arising.⁷⁷ Likewise, a denial that any trust exists,⁷⁸ or a resort to the statute of frauds to defeat the enforcement of a parol trust or obligation,⁷⁹ is not such a fraud as to give rise to a constructive trust.

§ 140. Statutory Provisions in General

Under some statutes, an involuntary trust may be impressed where gain is acquired by fraud, mistake, or the like, and no conditions other than those stated in the statute need not be shown. Statutes restricting the purposes for which express trusts may be created, or abolishing certain resulting trusts, do not apply to constructive trusts or prevent them from arising.

In some jurisdictions constructive trusts may be declared by a court under statutes which provide that an involuntary trust shall arise where gain is acquired by fraud, mistake, or the like, or that one so acquiring gain shall be an involuntary trustee.⁸⁰ A trust arising under such a statute is a constructive trust,⁸¹ and in order to create such a trust, as defined in the statute, no conditions other than those stated in the statute are necessary.⁸² So, under the statute, actual fraud is not required, to support the trust, constructive fraud being sufficient,⁸³ nor is any actual or express fiduciary relationship between the parties essential,⁸⁴ and, in accordance with the general rule, discussed supra § 139 b, such a trust does not arise out of any wrong done at a time knowledge of impending insolvency of company did not constitute trust company trustee ex maleficio, since constructive trust is only raised to impress trust on property where none exists, but where one should exist.—Newark Distributing Terminals Co. v. Hospelhorn, 191 A. 707, 172 Md. 291

Agreement to share estate

(1) A claim against estate seeking to enforce an oral agreement to share estate of deceased requires specific performance of contract and is not a case for impressing a constructive trust on estate assets.—In re Loftus' Estate, 85 N.Y.S.2d 244, 193 Misc. 701.

(2) The doctrine of constructive trust was inapplicable to a conveyance of property by mother during her lifetime to dutiful son who was absent at time deed was executed and who had not met attorney who drafted the deed until after his mother's death, notwithstanding assurances given other heirs after mother's death, that each would get his share of the property.—*Kico v. Reliance on oral promise

Under statute providing that one who gains a thing by fraud is an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for benefit of person who would otherwise have had it, where grantor conveys property to another in reliance on oral promise of the latter to hold property in trust for grantor or a third person, and grantee subsequently repudiates trust, the trust is enforced in favor of the intended beneficiary.—Orellia v. Johnson, 242 P.2d 6, 38 Cal.2d 693.

Undue influence

Where mother through undue influence caused daughter to execute will excluding daughter's husband, who dismissed contest of wife's will and petition for removal of mother as guardian of daughter's estate on sole consideration of oral promise of mother to will husband equivalent of daughter's estate and niece of mother used undue influence to obtain her realty and to be named in will as sole heir, constructive trust was properly imposed on parcel of realty to which niece held title to extent of husband's claim.—*West v. such statutes are meant to prevent frauds and not to encourage them,⁹¹ and a court of equity will not permit a person to shield himself behind the statute of frauds in order to perpetrate a fraud.⁹² So it is frequently said that a constructive trust may be established by parol evidence, as discussed infra § 157. On the other hand, where there is not such fraud or wrongdoing as to warrant the establishment and enforcement of a constructive trust, a parol agreement with respect to realty remains within the application of the statute of frauds and no trust can validly be raised.⁹³

Express or implied exception

The statutory requirement that a trust must be created by a written instrument does not apply in the case of creation of a constructive trust because of fraud or wrongdoing of the trustee, since trusts ex maleficio are either expressly or tacitly excepted from statutory provisions.—Kren v. Rubin, 61 N.W.2d 9, 338 Mich. 288.

Confidential relationship

Where a formal writing is not in evidence because of a situation growing out of the very confidential relationship of husband and wife, the statute of frauds may not be interposed as a defense.—Sands v. Sands, 118 N.Y.S.2d 690.

Rescission of contract

Petition asking rescission for fraud of contract involving stock, and to have stock impressed with implied trust or judgment for its market value, was not generally demurrable as seeking to ingratify implied trust on written contract by parol.—Schofield v. Burns, 172 S.E. 569, 178 Ga. 186.

Representations as to credit

Statutes exempting bank from liability for cashier's oral representations as to another's credit did not prevent assignees of notes sold by cashier, accompanied by forged financial statements, from establishing preferred claims and impressing bank's funds with trust for amount obtained by bank through cashier's fraud.—*Beall v. Absence of confidential relationship

Where nothing in pleadings or proof indicated that plaintiff's wife, to whom he had conveyed realty, occupied the position of advisor or counsellor to her husband, no confidential relationship was shown, and in absence of such proof, statute of frauds barred enforcement of wife's oral promise to reconvey such realty to her husband.—Stewart v. Hooks, 94 A.2d 756, 373 Pa. 542.

self and denies the trust, and no part of the purchase money is paid by the principal, and there is no written agreement, he cannot compel the agent to convey the estate to him, as that would be in violation of the statute of frauds;⁹⁴ but in a number of other decisions the contrary has been held.⁹⁵

Termination of trust. Although a constructive trust in lands may be terminated by parol, there cannot be an oral extinguishment or surrender of the beneficial interest to the trustee where the trust grows out of abuse of a confidential relationship induced by close kinship.⁹⁶

§ 142. Particular Matters as Giving Rise to Constructive Trust

Generally, any transaction may be the basis for creating a constructive trust where for any reason the defendant holds funds which in equity and good conscience should be possessed by the plaintiff, and the forms and varieties of constructive trusts are practically without limit.

Generally, any transaction may be the basis for creating a constructive trust where for any reason defendant holds funds which in equity and good conscience should be possessed by plaintiff.⁹⁷ The forms and varieties of constructive trusts are practically without limit,⁹⁸ such trusts being raised, broadly speaking, whenever necessary to prevent injustice.⁹⁹ It has been held, however, that the doctrine of constructive trust must be applied with caution,¹ and that the doctrine cannot be invoked to broaden the basis of equity jurisdiction or to bring within its

Requirement of writing for employment agreement

Under statute providing an agreement employing an agent or broker to sell or purchase realty for compensation shall be void unless in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, where real estate broker orally employed as an agent to negotiate for his principal the purchase of land violated principal's confidence and purchased land with own money and thereafter sold land at a profit, breach of verbal promise was not sufficient basis on which to establish a constructive trust or a trust ex maleficio in proceeds of sale.—Carkonen v. No consideration

A parol agreement, by which defendants were to purchase certain lands at a scavenger sale in the name of plaintiff, was not unenforceable under the statute of frauds as an agreement relating to real estate, but under the agreement defendants were the agents of plaintiff and could be made to account as constructive trustees notwithstanding agents received no consideration for acting as such and they advanced their own money with which to purchase such lands.—Trippensee v. Rice, 20 N.W.2d 172, 312 Mich. 233.

Purchase on commission

Despite provision of statute requiring agreement whereby broker is retained to purchase land on commission to be in writing, brokers who were employed under oral contract to purchase land for another, but who wrongfully purchased it for themselves, would be held accountable as constructive trustees for use and benefit of parties by whom brokers had been employed.—Harris v. Violation of established principle

Whenever the circumstances of a transaction are such that the person who takes the legal estate in property cannot also enjoy the beneficial interest without necessarily violating some established principle of equity the court will immediately raise a constructive trust and fasten it on the conscience of the legal owner so as to convert him into a trustee for the persons who, in equity, are entitled to the beneficial enjoyment.—Steinmetz v. 1. N.C.—Atkinson v. Atkinson, 33 S.E.2d 666, 225 N.C. 120.

Reason for rule

A constructive trust must be used with caution, especially where proof of wrongful acts rests in parol, in order that trust may not defeat the purpose of statute of wills, statute of descent and distribution, or statute of frauds.—Pope v. Garrett, 211 S.W.2d 559, 147 Tex. 18.

cognizance situations which have heretofore escaped the comprehension of a long recognized rule.²

Each case allegedly involving a constructive trust is to be determined from the facts, circumstances, and conditions as presented therein.³ Particular circumstances have been held not to give rise to a constructive trust,⁴ as in transactions involving amounts received under contracts,⁵ attorneys' fees,⁶ improvements on real property,⁷ insurance policies,⁸ leases,⁹ and right to rents.¹⁰ A constructive trust does not arise out of a breach of a written contract,¹¹ and the mere failure to perform an agreement or to carry out a promise cannot in itself give rise to a constructive trust, since such a breach does not in itself constitute fraud or abuse of confidence requisite to the existence of a constructive trust.¹²

Lease to competitor

Where business property was leased to tenant's competitor on tenant's failure to exercise option to renew lease and it was not shown that any confidential or fiduciary relationship existed between tenant and competitor, or that competitor owed any duty toward tenant, tenant was not entitled to a decree that competitor acquired its leasehold estate as a "constructive trustee" of tenant—Goldberg's Corp. v. No beneficial interest

Unenforceable contract

A mere violation of an unenforceable contract does not raise a constructive trust as to real property—Elliott v. Wood, 212 P.2d 906, 95 Cal. App.2d 314.

Agreement to pay money

Other statement of rule

To establish a constructive trust, there must have been an original misrepresentation by means of which legal title was obtained, an original intention to circumvent or some plan to get the better bargain; and, in the absence of some clear evidence of fraud, imposition, or mistake at time of execution of a conveyance, a grantee's subsequent refutation of an alleged parol promise is not a fraud against which equity can relieve—Scott v. Scott, 57 S.E.2d 470, 216 S.C. 280.

Contract to sell land

(1) The mere fact that vendor has refused to carry out informal voidable contract to sell land is not adequate ground on which to declare a "constructive trust" in favor of vendee—Nelson Development Co. v. Ohio Oil Co., D.C.Ill., 45 F.Supp. 933.

Also, a constructive trust cannot be based on a theory that a prior oral contract supersedes a written contract, since all prior negotiations, discussions, and propositions are merged into the writing, and the rights of the parties are governed by it.¹³ Mere failure to pay a debt will not give rise to a constructive trust,¹⁴ and no trust arises merely because of the refunding or repaying of a part of the purchase price for a transfer of property after title has vested in the named grantee.¹⁵ Whether a constructive trust arises from a transaction in which the consideration runs from one and the benefit results to another depends on the intention of the parties.¹⁶

§ 143. — Mistake

A constructive trust ordinarily arises in favor of the rightful owner of property where, through a mistake of fact, title to, and apparent ownership of, property rightfully belonging to such person is obtained by another.

Where, through a mistake of fact, title to, and apparent ownership of, property rightfully belonging to one person is obtained by another, a constructive trust ordinarily arises in favor of the rightful owner of such property.¹⁷ So where, by mistake, one obtains a conveyance of more land,¹⁸ or a greater interest or estate,¹⁹ than that to which he is entitled, he becomes a constructive trustee of the excess; and where a decedent's estate is administered and distributed as that of an intestate, and thereafter a will is discovered which bequeaths or devises the property to different persons, the distributees are to be treated as constructive trustees for the persons entitled under the will.²⁰ Likewise, one who receives money to which he is not entitled, through mistake of fact, may be treated as a trustee thereof for the rightful owner;²¹ and if one who has received property by mistake conveys it to an innocent purchaser, and receives the consideration therefor, he becomes a trustee of the amount received²² or, as has been held, of the full value of the property,²³ for the true owner. Ordinarily, however, in a case of money paid and received by mistake, the payee is not to be held a trustee, since the mistake is one which can be remedied at law.²⁴ Where the circumstances do not establish "mistake" within the terms of a statute providing for the imposition of a constructive trust, no such relief may be obtained.²⁵

(2) A grantee's mere failure to pay grantor's debt, secured by trust deed lien on land conveyed partly in consideration of grantee's assumption of such debt, did not constitute "fraud" creating "constructive trust" for grantor and his heirs in minerals excepted from conveyance after grantee's purchase of land, with exception of specified mineral interest, from lienholder, who acquired land at foreclosure sale.—*Talley v. § 144. — Invalidity of Conveyance or Transfer

A grantee of property under an invalid conveyance or transfer becomes a constructive trustee of the property for the benefit of the owner thereof; and the consideration paid, or property purchased therewith by the grantor is to be deemed as held in trust for the grantee.

It has been held that a grantee of property under an invalid conveyance or transfer becomes a constructive trustee of the property,²⁶ or, if he sells it, of the consideration received therefor,²⁷ for the benefit of the owner of the property; and that the consideration paid,²⁸ or property purchased therewith by the grantor,²⁹ is to be deemed as held in trust for the grantee. According to some authority, however, if a conveyance is invalid the title remains in the grantor, and the grantee cannot be deemed to be a constructive trustee.³⁰ It has also been held that where property is conveyed for a consideration and not as a gift, and the conveyance is ineffective

due to fraud or mutual mistake to transfer the whole or a part of the property, equity will treat the transaction as though there were a precedent contract to transfer and will impose a constructive trust based on the duty of the transferor to complete the transfer for which he received consideration.³¹

The destruction of an unrecorded deed by the parties thereto, with the intention by both to abandon the conveyance and restore title to the grantor, creates such an equitable right in the grantor that the grantee is considered as holding title in trust only, for the grantor's benefit.³²

Invalidity of attempt to create express trust does not give rise to a constructive trust in favor of the beneficiary of the intended express trust,³³ but has been held to raise a constructive trust in favor of the settlor or trustor, or those succeeding to his interest.³⁴ The fact, however, that the same per-

Fraudulent conveyance

Where wife's conveyance of realty to her sister was fraudulent as to husband's children under a joint will executed by husband and wife which embodied an antenuptial contract, children were entitled to impress a trust on the realty and to obtain specific performance of the contract.—De Jong v. Huyser, 11 N.W.2d 566, 233 Iowa 1315.

Profits

Where grantor is permitted to rescind conveyances for fraud, the grantor may at her election either charge grantee as the constructive trustee with the profits derived from property while it was wrongfully held by grantee, or charge grantee with its fair rental value for such period.—Lang v. Graudo, 40 N.E.2d 707, 311 Mass. 132.

there was no constructive trust but a mere breach of contract, against which the homestead exemption must be recognized.—Sutton v. Ford, 220 S.W.2d 125, 215 Ark. 269.

Unlawful purpose

Generally, equity will not at the instance of a beneficiary effect by way of a resulting or a constructive trust the accomplishment of a purpose which, because of illegality or violation of public policy, is beyond the powers of an express trust.—State ex rel. Squire v. Central United Nat. Bank, 4 Ohio Supp. 269.

Title under statute

Where court found that trustee held title to land under statute by a trust created by, but not contained or declared in, conveyance to trustee, or by a conveyance made to trustee without declaring name of beneficiary, there was no constructive trust, but an express trust to enable trustee to deal freely with such land.—Thlocco v. Magnolia Petroleum Co. C.C.A. Tex., 141 F.2d 934, certiorari denied 65 S.Ct. 276, 233 U.S. 875, 89 L.Ed. 627.

Presence of basic elements

Where attempt is made to create trust, and basic elements of intent, purpose, and subject matter are present, but trust is unenforceable because of statute of frauds or some

son or persons are beneficiaries of the constructive trust as would have been beneficiaries of the intended express trust is not fatal to the creation of the constructive trust, in such a case, and does not prevent it from arising.³⁵ It has also been held that the rule that a voluntary express trust which fails because the settlor did not effectively convey title to the trustee will not be enforced in equity by impressing the subject matter of the trust in the hands of the settlor with a constructive trust in favor of the intended beneficiary does not apply to an intended transfer founded on a valuable consideration.³⁶

§ 145. — Fraud in General

The frauds or wrongs for which courts will give relief by impressing a constructive trust are those for which the courts in the exercise of their legal powers will give damages as compensation.

As a general rule, the frauds or wrongs for which courts in the exercise of equitable powers will give relief by impressing a constructive trust are those for which the courts in the exercise of their legal powers will give damages as compensation.³⁷ As discussed supra § 139 b, fraud is generally a necessary element for the imposition of a constructive trust, and such fraud may be actual or constructive. Constructive fraud giving rise to a constructive trust may exist in any act or omission which is contrary to legal or equitable duty or trust or confidence justly reposed and which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another.³⁸ Where one person by his promise to buy, hold, or dispose of realty for another's benefit induces action or forbearance, it is fraud if the promise is not enforced, and the promisee will be treated as a trustee for the benefit of the party interested.³⁹

§ 146. — Fraud or Other Wrong in Acquisition of Property in General

a. General rules

b. Particular transactions giving rise to trust

a. General Rules

A person who acquires land or other property by fraud, misrepresentation, imposition, or concealment, or under any other such circumstances as to render it inequitable for him to retain the property, is in equity to be regarded as a trustee ex maleficio thereof for a person who suffers by reason of the fraud or other wrong, and who is equitably entitled to the property.

It is a general principle that one who acquires land or other property by fraud, misrepresentation, imposition, or concealment, or under any other such circumstances as to render it inequitable for him to retain the property, is in equity to be regarded as a trustee ex maleficio thereof for a person who suffers by reason of the fraud or other wrong, and who is equitably entitled to the property,⁴⁰ even other invalidating cause, trustee cannot keep the property individually but will be declared a constructive trustee.—In re Gaines' Estate, 100 P. 2d 1065, 15 Cal.2d 255.

Basis of jurisdiction

Where a constructive trust is predicated on fraud in acquisition of property or actual or constructive fraud which law will refer to such acquisition, basis of jurisdiction is continuance of aggrieved person's equitable interest in property of which he has been fraudulently deprived, despite outward forms of legality under which true ownership has been submerged—Atkinson v. Atkinson, 33 S.E.2d 666, 225 N.C. 120.

Violation of duty

(1) A constructive trust arises when legal title to property is obtained in violation of some duty owed to the one who is equitably entitled to the title, and property thus obtained is held in hostility to his beneficial rights of ownership, and all constructive trusts may be referred to fraud as to their final source—Van Auker v. Tyrrell, 33 A.2d 339, 130 Conn. 289.

(2) Where a person procures legal title to property in violation of some duty to true owner, equity, for the purpose of doing justice in the most efficient manner, constructs a trust out of the transaction and makes a trustee out of person thus acquiring title—McNeill v. Dobson-Bainbridge Realty Co., 195 S.W.2d 626, 184 Tenn. 99.

Fraud of third person

Property obtained by one through the fraudulent practice of a third person will be held under a constructive trust for the person defrauded—Brennan v. Perselli, 288 Ill.App. 441, affirmed 187 N.E. 820, 353 Ill. 630—65 C.J. p. 462 note 44 [f].

Inadequacy of price, accompanied by circumstances showing overreaching, oppression, undue influence, or similar circumstances preventing the parties from contracting on substantially equal terms, is a basis of fraud warranting imposition of a constructive trust, but inadequacy alone is not regarded as a sufficient basis of fraud to set aside a legal transaction. Cal.—Philip v. Hobart, 229 P.2d 783, 103 Cal.App.2d 446.

Ill.—Galvin v. O'Neill, 66 N.E.2d 403, 393 Ill. 475.

65 C.J. p. 462 note 44 [g].

Time trust arises

(1) An implied or constructive trust arises at the time of a wrongful acquisition of property by the wrongdoer—Johnson v. Graff, 23 N.W.2d 166, 71 S.D. 231.

(2) If constructive trust arises, it is ordinarily impressed on legal title when legal title passes—Lotus Oil Co. v. Spires, Tex. Civ.App., 240 S.W.2d 367.

Augmentation of assets

Generally, augmentation of assets of trustee ex maleficio is necessary to impress constructive trust on property fraudulently appropriated—Bancroft Trust Co. v. Federal Nat. Bank of Boston, D.C. Mass., 9 F.Supp. 350.

65 C.J. p. 466 note 48.

In order to avoid the statute of frauds in contending for a constructive trust because of misrepresentations, the confidence must have been induced, not by a bare promise, but by the promise and the confidential relation conjoined, and it must ap-

sons claiming property under defective titles would be trustees for the "true" owners.⁴³ Likewise, even though equitable considerations or fiduciary relations exist, no trust arises in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct in acquiring the title;⁴⁴ and although fraudulent representations are made for the purpose of acquiring property, if the grantor or transferor does not rely or act on them no trust arises in his favor.⁴⁵ In order to establish a constructive trust based on fraud or wrongdoing, an oral promise is sufficient, and the existence or absence of a confidential relationship between the parties, in the strict sense, is not controlling.⁴⁶

Duress. Duress as a result of which property is acquired may warrant imposition of a constructive trust,⁴⁷ but before equity will grant such relief, the situation must be such that the person making the payment had no other adequate means for protecting his property.⁴⁸

Trust after property converted. A suit lies to establish a constructive trust of property wrongfully obtained whether the property remains in specie in the hands of the wrongdoer, or has been converted into another form.⁴⁹ Where property fraudulently obtained is converted into, or exchanged for, other property, a constructive trust is impressed on and follows the other property,⁵⁰ unless and until it passes to a bona fide purchaser for value and with-pear that the absence of a formal writing grew out of that very confidence and trust, and was occasioned by it—Hiffer v. Calmac Oil & Gas Corp., 10 N.Y.S.2d 531, 258 App.Div. 78, affirmed 16 N.Y.S.2d 104, 258 App.Div. 78.

Absence of specific interest

Where person's entire claim against bus company, arising from collision, was settled by lump sum payment with no amount specifically designated for any particular element of damages, such person acquired nothing that belonged in law or equity to physician who treated his injuries and such person was not a trustee for amount of physician's bill, notwithstanding such bill was represented to bus company as a valid obligation of such person—*Woodruff v. Deed absolute in form

Mere proof of confidential relationship between grantor and grantee is not sufficient to establish a trust of property conveyed by deed absolute in form.—Kingsley v. Carroll, 234 P.2d 1039, 106 Cal.2d 358.

Overpayment

Alleged fraud whereby beneficiary of life policy obtained overpayment because of misstatement of insured's age would not establish constructive trust in favor of insurer on fund due beneficiary from another insurance company, since money overpaid to beneficiary did not comprise portion of funds owing from other insurance company.—Ponder v. Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co., 109 S.W.2d 946, 194 Ark. 829.

Threat to foreclose

Purchase money notes

Where real estate agent, who was employed by vendor, intentionally concealed from vendor that agent was himself purchasing property for his mother and resold the property at a profit, receiving as part of the consideration secured purchase money notes which agent transferred to his mother, for the purpose of accounting as constructive trustee for original vendor, agent was regarded as having converted purchase money notes, thereby making applicable the rule that in conversion of choses in action the face value is prima facie the actual value.—McNeill v. Dobson-Bainbridge Realty Co., 195 S.W.2d 626, 184 Tenn. 99.

out notice;⁵¹ and, where land obtained by fraud is converted into money, the latter is impressed with a trust in favor of the person defrauded.⁵²

Theft or misappropriation of property. It has been held that a thief is not a constructive trustee for the owner in respect of the stolen property, or the proceeds thereof or property purchased therewith, since no relation of confidence exists between them at the time the property is taken.⁵³ According to other authorities, however, no fiduciary relation is essential to the jurisdiction of a court of equity to declare and enforce a trust of stolen or misappropriated property,⁵⁴ and a trust will also be declared in respect of property purchased by the wrongdoer with property or money stolen or misappropriated.⁵⁵ Where fiduciary relations do in fact exist between the owner of property or money and a thief or embezzler thereof, a trust arises and may be enforced.⁵⁶

b. Particular Transactions Giving Rise to Trust

The transactions which will be treated in equity as containing such an element of fraud as to give rise to constructive trusts are numerous and varied, and a constructive trust for fraud or wrong may exist in almost any case where there is a wrongful acquisition or detention of property to which another is entitled.

It has been said that the transactions which will be treated in equity as containing such an element of fraud, active or constructive, as to give rise to constructive trusts in such cases are numerous and varied;⁵⁷ and it has been held that a constructive trust for fraud or wrong, being based on the equitable principle that no one can take advantage of his own wrong, exists in almost any case where there is a wrongful acquisition or detention of property to which another is entitled.⁵⁸ So constructive trusts based on fraud or wrongdoing have been imposed in numerous particular circumstances or transactions,⁵⁹ involving bank accounts,⁶⁰ a bank-

(1) All principles of constructive trusts are applicable to joint and survivorship bank account during parties' lifetime, and equity will give relief against mistake or fraud in respect thereto as quickly and fully as with respect to any other class of property.—Steiner v. Fecycz, 50 N.E.2d 617, 72 Ohio App. 18.

(2) One who, by undue influence, induces a testatrix to transfer savings deposits into a joint account, and after death of testatrix withdraws such deposit to her own use, holds proceeds as trustee for the benefit of testatrix and her estate.—Smith v. Stratton, 18 N.E.2d 328, 302 Mass. 17.

(3) Where mother opened account represented by savings bankbook in her name and thereafter caused it to be changed by adding name of her son as true joint account on his promise that funds therein would be used for benefit of other son, if son should survive her and son admitted after mother's death that he was holding account for other son's benefit, a constructive trust resulted in favor of other son after death of son holding the joint account.—In re Schulman's Estate, 72 N.Y.S.2d 339, 189 Misc. 672, appeal dismissed 75 N.Y.S.2d 517.

Collusion

A creditor of an insolvent foreign estate, who, through collusion, has received payment of his claim in full to the exclusion of other creditors may not, in equity and good conscience, hold such fund as against the other creditors, but, as to the other creditors, holds the fund received as a trustee.—Lowendahl v. President and Directors of Manhattan Co., 1 N.Y.S.2d 433, 166 Misc. 105.

Payment of mortgage indebtedness

A transaction whereby judgment debtor, while insolvent, paid mortgage indebtedness against entireties property with his personal funds, resulted in something similar to a trust ex maleficio from which neither judgment debtor nor his wife could benefit.—McCaslin v. Schouten, 292 N.W. 696, 244 Mich. 180.

some form of fraud or wrongdoing,⁷⁸ secret devices or machines,⁷⁹ and shares of stock.⁸⁰

On the other hand, particular conduct has been held not to constitute such fraud or wrongdoing as to give rise to a constructive trust.⁸¹ Where one improves another's property under a contract which is unenforceable, equity, it has been held, may redress the injury by declaring a trust;⁸² but it has also been held that, where the owner of land by fraud induces another to make expenditures in improving the land, the defrauded person is not entitled to enforce a constructive trust.⁸³ Where a person not in possession of property acquires possession and undisputed conditional title by virtue of surrender of an admittedly bona fide claim of another on condition that the property will be taken subject to defined rights of the other, an implied trust results in such other's favor.⁸⁴

Acquisition of property by homicide. A person who acquires an interest in property as a result of homicide may be held to be a constructive trustee of such interest for the heirs of the person killed,⁸⁵ but it has also been held that the maxim that one should not be permitted to profit by his own wrong is insufficient to warrant the creation of a con-

Improvement

The owner of a lot who with a fraudulent purpose permitted another mistakenly to erect a building thereon held title to his interest in the lot and to the improvement so acquired as constructive trustee for such builder to extent of value of the improvement.—Loran Planning Mill Co. v. Pope, 27 S.E.2d 552, 126 W.Va. 321.

Tenancy by entirety

Where marriage took place while man had a living wife and woman was fraudulently led to believe that man was her husband, and she conveyed property purchased with her own money to man and herself as tenants by the entirety, a court of equity could decree a constructive trust in her favor with respect to the property purchased.—Schwarz v. U. S., C.A. Md., 191 F.2d 618.

Payment

Where vendor's grantees had already paid vendor for the realty, vendor was not entitled, in action by purchaser's administratrix against vendor and vendor's grantees for specific performance of alleged contract to purchase realty, to receive payment a second time, and, therefore, payment, if any, would have to be in trust for the grantees.—Keirsey v. Hirsch, 265 P.2d 346, 58 N.M. 18.

78. Undue influence

If a trust is revoked as a result of undue influence, the beneficiary may hold those who received the property gratuitously from the trustor as constructive trustees, even though such persons did not participate in the undue influence.—Hughes v. First Nat.

Survivorship

(1) When one tenant by entirety feloniously kills the other, survivor possesses whole legal interest in property involved, but will be determined, under equitable principle that a person shall not be permitted to profit by his own wrong, to hold such interest on constructive trust for others entitled to co-tenant's estate, except that survivor is entitled to commuted value of net income of half of property for period of his or her life expectancy.

(2) Where contract creating joint and several bank account gives each joint owner a right to withdraw all funds from account, which right will be defeated if he fails to survive the other joint owner or the other withdraws first, one joint owner cannot gain an indefeasible interest by feloniously causing the death of the other, and the uncertainty as to whose right would have been defeated in the ordinary course of events is to be resolved against the survivor, and a constructive trust imposed on the entire balance of the account.—Vesey v. Vesey, 54 N.W.2d 385, 237 Minn. 295.

structive trust,⁸⁶ at least where no intent to kill is involved, but merely manslaughter.⁸⁷

Procuring or preventing devise or bequest. Fraud or undue influence in procuring or preventing a devise or bequest may warrant the imposition of a constructive trust in favor of the person who would otherwise have received the property.⁸⁸ So an interested person who by fraud, duress, coercion, or deception frustrates an attempt, as distinguished from an intent, to revoke a will will not be allowed to profit by his misconduct and equity may impress a trust on the devise in favor of heirs at law or the intended legatee under a new will which will have the same effect as a revocation.⁸⁹ On the other hand the frustration of a mere intent to revoke a will will not give rise to a constructive trust,⁹⁰ and, according to some authority, before a person can be held to be a trustee ex maleficio for failure to carry out a promise to destroy a will, the proof must show that testator undertook to accomplish acts which would have resulted in a legal revocation and that testator was prevented from effecting the fulfillment of such acts by the force or fraud of defendant.⁹¹

§ 147. — Acquisition at Judicial Sale

Where a purchaser at a private sale would be deemed to hold the property purchased in trust for another, a purchaser at a judicial sale under like circumstances will equally be regarded as so holding it.

Since the doctrine of constructive trusts applies equally to purchases of property at judicial sales and at private sales, as discussed supra § 139, it is a general principle that where a purchaser at a private sale would be deemed to hold the property purchased in trust for another, a purchaser at a judicial sale under like circumstances will equally be regarded as so holding it.⁹² So, under the general rule relating to the acquisition of property by fraud or other

Extrinsic fraud

(1) Where, through extrinsic fraud practiced in probate proceedings, distributees have improperly obtained property, equity will declare that distributees hold property in trust for rightful owners.—Perguson v. Ferguson, 137 P.2d 735, 58 Cal. App. 2d 811.—In re Madsen's Estate, 87 P. 2d 903, 31 Cal. App. 2d 240.—Zaremba v. Woods, 61 P.2d 976, 17 Cal. App. 2d 309.

(2) Where an heir knows of the existence of other heirs, and for the purpose of defrauding such heirs and benefiting himself, he fails to notify the court of the existence of such heirs, and knowingly files false petitions with the court representing that there are no such heirs, he is guilty of extrinsic fraud warranting the imposition of a trust on the fraudulent distributee's interest.—Hewett v. Linstead, 122 P.2d 352, 49 Cal. App. 2d 607.—Zaremba v. Woods, supra.

(3) Executrix, who gave statutory notice of hearing for distribution of estate as required by statute, and who acted in good faith, was not guilty of extrinsic fraud or mistake, in failing to discover that action had been filed on rejected claim, and, on discovering the filing of the action, to inform the court, and holder of claim was not entitled to have a trust imposed in his favor on the estate.—Thayer v. Fish, 122 P.2d 358, 49 Cal. App. 2d 618.

Preventing signing of will

Where intestate, shortly before her death, requested a neighbor to have a will prepared for her leaving all of her property to plaintiff, who was not a relative of intestate, but, when will was brought to intestate for signature, certain heirs of intestate, who were present, prevented intestate from signing the will, a constructive trust was imposed in favor of plaintiff as to all the property of intestate, and heirs of intestate were constructive trustees for plaintiff, even those heirs who were not present when intestate was prevented from signing the will.—Pope v. Garrett, 211 S.W.2d 559, 147 Tex. 18.

Failure to witness will

Where deceased's husband failed to carry out repeated promises to have decedent's will witnessed until it was too late, thus preventing deceased's niece, named as legatee, from sharing in estate, constructive trust was held to have arisen in favor of niece, even though there was no intention to defraud at time of promise.—Thomas v. Briggs, 189 N.E. 389, 93 Ind. App. 352.

Notice

Will and codicil on file in office of clerk of probate court did not constitute constructive notice of alteration in codicil with respect to whether constructive trust was created in favor of one who was eliminated as beneficiary by alteration.—Little v. Mettee, 93 S.W.2d 1000, 338 Mo. 1223.

90. Fla.—Moneyham v. Hamilton, 168 So. 522, 124 Fla. 430.

False pretense

Fact that sole beneficiary of will falsely pretended to be unable to find will when requested by testator to bring will to him so that he might destroy it did not impress trust on devise in favor of heirs at law other than sole beneficiary, or to make will inoperative, there having been no attempt by testator to revoke will.—Moneyham v. Hamilton, supra.

91. Ark.—Reiter v. Carroll, 198 S.W.2d 163, 210 Ark. 841.

Failure to comply with statute

Where testator's statement to beneficiary directing him to destroy will did not effect a revocation for failure to comply with statute, and statement of beneficiary that destruction had been accomplished, although false, was not sufficient to constitute an actionable fraud because, even if statement were true and will was destroyed, there was still no legal revocation, and beneficiary could not be adjudicated a trustee ex maleficio of testator's estate for benefit of heirs at law.—Reiter v. Carroll, supra.

wrong, discussed supra § 146, where one who acquires property at a judicial sale has been guilty of wrongful conduct in bringing about such sale, a constructive trust ordinarily arises in favor of the true owner.⁹³ Similarly, where a purchaser at a judicial sale becomes such under such circumstances or state of facts as would make it inequitable to permit him to hold on to his bargain,⁹⁴ as by representing that he is buying for the benefit of those who own or have an interest in the property being sold,⁹⁵ or that he intends to reconvey such property to them,⁹⁶ or to permit them to redeem it,⁹⁷ and thereby discourages other bidding or obtains the property at a sacrifice, such purchaser will be deemed in equity

a constructive trustee for the persons injured by his fraud. On the other hand, no constructive trust arises by reason of acquisition of property at a judicial sale where there has been no fraud or bad faith such as to warrant imposition of a constructive trust.⁹⁸

§ 148. — Parol Promise to Hold in Trust or Dispose of Devise, Bequest, or Inheritance

Intentional default
Where husband in possession of realty held with wife as tenants by entirety, received all rent and purposely defaulted to acquire title through foreclosure of mortgage, or purchased at foreclosure sale through medium of third person, equity would not permit husband to acquire the title to exclusion of wife but husband would hold property in trust for wife.—Hatcher v. Allen, 17 S.E. 454, 220 N.C. 407.

Failure to pay rent

Where tenant failed to pay rent with which landlord would have been enabled to redeem his property from tax sale, and lulled the landlord into a feeling of security by promises of payment, and the tenant procured tax title for himself through a third person, a constructive trust arose in favor of the landlord, and the third party held the tax title as trustee ex maleficio for use and benefit of the landlord.—Eckert v. Miller, 111 P.2d 60, 57 Ariz. 94.

Duty to pay taxes

(1) Where owner in fee of the reversion of a city lot, who was entitled to annual ground rent, alleged that purchaser of lot at tax sale was under duty to pay taxes as mortgagee of subleasehold interest and that sale was a fraudulent attempt to deprive owner in fee of the reversion of her interest in annual ground rent issuing from property, if facts were established, equity would direct that purchaser hold title to lot in trust for benefit of owner in fee of the reversion, so that interest and estate of owner in fee of the reversion may be protected in accordance with equitable principles.—Crocker v. Pitti, 16 A.2d 875, 179 Md. 52.

(2) Where one cotenant assures a second cotenant, who is guardian of a minor cotenant, that he will pay taxes on common property with intent to lull second cotenant into false sense of security with formed purpose of letting taxes go unpaid in order that, at a scavenger sale, first cotenant might, as purchaser, cut off interest of second cotenant and her ward, first cotenant's title, acquired at scavenger sale, may be impressed with a trust ex maleficio.—Koenig v. Koenig, 18 N.W.2d 250, 311 Mich. 12.

(3) It has been held, however, that the fact that defendant breached agreement to pay plaintiff's taxes was not such fraud as to create constructive trust on plaintiff's lands purchased by defendant at tax sale.—Doohan v. Nauman, 20 P.2d 37, 172 Wash. 372.

Purchase by husband

Where wife, who was surety on note of her husband, executed mortgage on her realty as security for husband's debt, and husband subsequently purchased the realty at sale under power contained in mortgage, paid off debt, and without wife's knowledge, took title in himself, a constructive trust arose in favor of wife.—Speight v. Foreclosure of vendor's lien

In absence of fraud or collusion, the fact that purchaser of lots at paying lien foreclosure, who agreed to sell the lots to the former owner, who in turn agreed to surrender immediate possession of the lots pending purchaser's reimbursement of investment from rentals, later purchased the lots at foreclosure of vendor's lien for a consideration, equal to the indebtedness, did not incur the lots with a trust in former owner's favor.—Ritch v. Grant, 130 S.W.2d 1019, 134 Tex. 10.

Redemption by second mortgagee

Second mortgagee, who was a defendant in action to foreclose first mortgage, and who redeemed premises from sale pursuant to judgment, from which mortgagors did not appeal and by terms of which second mortgagee's title became absolute, was not a stranger or a volunteer, and hence mortgagors were not entitled to benefit of a trust, even if note secured by second mortgage was satisfied.—Rollins v. Holcomb, 190 A.260, 122 Conn. 664.

Discharge of note

Where grantors' obligation to hold grantees harmless as to indebtedness secured by trust deed on conveyed premises was expressed in and represented by note and chattel mortgage and grantors discharged the note but grantees did not pay indebtedness secured by trust deed, grantors, purchasing property at trust deed foreclosure sale, did not hold title in trust for grantees.—Long v. Von Erdmannsdorff, Mo., 111 S.W.2d 37.

constructive trust for the persons for whom he agreed to hold it; but the promise must have been the cause of the decedent's failure to make the necessary legal provision, by will or otherwise, to effectuate his desire.

Where a testator or ancestor makes known to his devisee, legatee, or heir his desire that his property shall be disposed of in a particular manner, and that he relies on him to carry his desire into effect, and such devisee, legatee, or heir uses words or does acts calculated to cause, and which he knows do in fact cause, the testator or ancestor to believe that he fully assents thereto, and where in consequence thereof the testator or ancestor makes, or omits to make, a will or such particular disposition of his property in his lifetime as will carry out his desire, a constructive trust is created;⁹⁹ and this rule applies, it has been said, even where a devise or bequest is on an express trust inconsistent with the constructive trust.¹

In order to sustain a constructive trust under such circumstances the promise must have been the cause of the failure to make the necessary legal provision to effectuate the decedent's desire,² and it has been said that it must appear that the decedent was in a position to carry out, and but for the promise would have carried out or effectuated, his desire and intention.³ It must also appear that decedent relied on the promise of the devisee, legatee, or heir as an effective arrangement for the disposition of his property,⁴ and where, without regard to the making of any promise, it is the testator's or ancestor's desire to leave property to a particular person, a mere agreement or understanding with the latter as to his subsequent disposal of the property does not give rise to a trust.⁵

Fraud or undue influence in procuring or preventing a devise or bequest as giving rise to constructive trust generally see supra § 146.

Prevention of unjust enrichment

When testator makes a devise absolute in terms, but on oral agreement that devisee will apply the devised estate to some lawful purpose designated by testator, equity will enforce a constructive trust, which is imposed to prevent unjust enrichment not merely to carry out testator's intent.—In re Brennen's Estate, 63 A.2d 69, 360 Pa. 558

Actual intentional fraud not required

Although constructive trust in property devised or bequeathed may be established by oral evidence, it is not dependent on pleading and proof of actual intentional fraud before or contemporaneously with making of will or of existence of fiduciary relation, but rule is that one to whom property is devised or bequeathed in reliance on his agreement to hold it in trust for or convey it to third person holds it on constructive trust for such person.—Strype v. Lewis, 180 S.W.2d 688, 352 Mo. 1004, 155 A.L.R. 99.

Position of beneficiary

The distinction between the position of the beneficiary of a testamentary trust and the position of the beneficiary of a constructive trust under an agreement between a testator and his devisee that devisee will hold the property devised as trustee is that the interest of a beneficiary of a constructive trust does not arise under the will or laws of intestate succession.—In re Loring's Estate, 175 P.2d 524, 29 Cal.2d 423.

Property included

Where stepfather of children obtained a devise of mother's property on his representation to her that all of their property ultimately would go to children, constructive trust to enforce the obligation could be impressed only on property stepfather received from mother but could not be impressed on his own property or property not so obtained.—O'Boyle v. Brenner, 73 N.Y.S.2d 687, 189 Misc. 1058, modified on other grounds 79 N.Y.S.2d 84, 273 App.Div. 683, appeal dismissed 95 N.E.2d 47, 301 N.Y. 685.

65 C.J. p. 469 note 74.

Intent

In order to impress constructive trust on legatee because of testator's oral statements, it must plainly appear that testator intended to impose enforceable trust and would have changed his contemplated dispositions of property but for legatee's assent to such statements.—Housman v. C. I. R., supra.

No promise or agreement

Provision in will creating a trust but naming no beneficiaries, did not give rise to a constructive trust, where there was no showing that the trustee had made any promise to or agreement with testatrix to carry out disposition of property in certain manner.—Wagner v. Clauson, 78 N.E.2d 203, 399 Ill. 403, 3 A.L.R.2d 672.

5. Ill.—Allmon v. Pigg, 82 Ill. 149, 25 Am.R. 303.

Joint will

Fact that wife, who joined with her husband in executing wills leaving interest of each in community

No express promise on the part of the devisee, legatee, or heir is required in order to raise a constructive trust of property left to him with the expectation that it shall be held or disposed of in a particular manner,⁶ but his silent acquiescence or cooperation is sufficient,⁷ providing it is consciously given with intention that it shall amount to a promise or shall be taken by the testator or ancestor as a promise.⁸ The mere expression of a wish, however, by the testator or ancestor that his property be held or disposed of in a particular way is not sufficient to raise a trust,⁹ and, where a devisee or legatee had no knowledge of the testator's purpose or wishes at the time of making the will,¹⁰ or at such time notified the testator of his refusal to accede to his request,¹¹ no trust arises.

Where the promise or assurance, on the faith of which property is devised or bequeathed to two or more persons as joint tenants, is made by one of the joint tenants, the trust will be enforced against all, on the ground that with respect to property thus jointly devised or bequeathed the promise of one joint tenant binds all equally;¹² but where the devise or bequest is to several persons, either severally or as tenants in common and not as joint tenants, the trust will not be enforced as against such of them as have nothing to do with the making of the will.¹³

Promise by person taking no benefit under will to give property to a child of the testator, thereby inducing the testator to make no provision for such child, does not give rise to a trust in favor of the omitted child, at least in the absence of any fraudulent purpose.¹⁴ Similarly, a promise by an executor who takes no benefit under the will to dispose of property differently from the way the will directs, in reliance on which promise the will is not altered by the testator, does not make him a constructive trustee.¹⁵

§ 149. — Parol Promise to Hold in Trust or Reconvey Land Conveyed

The mere violation of a parol promise made by a grantee of land to the grantor thereof, to hold such land in trust or for a specified purpose, or to convey it back to the grantor or another, does not create a constructive trust in the grantee, in the absence of fraud in procuring the conveyance to him; but a constructive trust may arise where, in addition to the parol agreement or its breach, there is some element of fraud or bad faith which makes it inequitable that the grantee should hold the title absolutely and discharged of any trust.

The mere violation of a parol promise made by a grantee of land to the grantor thereof, to hold such land in trust or for a specified purpose, or to convey it back to the grantor or to a person designated or to be designated by him, does not create a constructive trust in the grantee, in the absence of fraud in procuring the conveyance to him,¹⁶ since property to the other with provision that if one predeceased the other interest should go to their daughter, after husband's death sold community property and gave proceeds of sale to a son to prevent property going to daughter, did not impress a trust on proceeds in favor of daughter.—*Garland v. the trust, if any, is an express one and is not enforceable under the statute of frauds;¹⁷ and, a fortiori, a simple avowal of acquisition of property for the benefit of another, or of an intention to convey it to another, not made as a promise or inducing the conveyance, will not give rise to a constructive trust.¹⁸ An offer by the purchaser of land to permit the vendor to repurchase the premises at any time with a reasonable profit is a simple option of purchase which contemplates purchase from the grantee as beneficial owner, and equity will not enforce it by declaring a trust.¹⁹

A constructive trust will arise, however, out of a promise to reconvey or hold in trust made in connection with the receipt of the legal title to property, provided the grantor's purpose is an honest one,²⁰ where, in addition to the parol agreement or

Violation of promise to convey land as fraud raising constructive trust in general see supra § 132.

Other statements of rule

(1) The doctrine of trusts ex maleficio with respect to land can never be applied when there is nothing more than a broken verbal promise—Mays v. Perry, 27 S.E.2d 698, 196 Ga. 729.

(2) A constructive trust cannot be established by merely showing that one who has obtained the legal title for a specified purpose, on an oral promise to convey to a third person, refuses to perform such promise or denies the existence of the trust—Stein v. Stein, 75 N.E.2d 869, 398 Ill. 397.

(3) Violation of parol trust agreement concerning lands, if established, is not of itself that nature of fraud which will sustain bill to enforce trust founded on claim of fraud—Tipton v. Tipton, 67 So.2d 94, 257 Ala. 32—Talley v. Talley, 26 So.2d 586, 248 Ala. 84.

(4) A person holds title to property in a constructive trust when he is under an obligation to convey it to another, if such obligation did not arise merely because he voluntarily assumed it.—Page v. Joplin Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 255 S.W.2d 821, 363 Mo. 1008.

(5) Transfer of land on an oral trust does not give rise to a constructive trust not subject to statute of frauds, unless transfer was procured by fraud, duress, undue influence, or mistake, transferee was at the time in a confidential relationship to transferor for whom he orally agreed to hold the land, transfer was effected by deed absolute in terms, but intended as a mere security, or transfer was made in contemplation of death.

Repossession of confidence

(1) The mere fact of conveyance of realty, pursuant to grantee's parol promise to reconvey it to grantor at grantor's request, is insufficient to create confidential relationship or constructive trust in grantee for grantor's benefit.—Fruener v. Stunert, 85 A.2d 130, 369 Pa. 178—65 C.J. p. 471 note 86 [a].

(2) The statute of frauds, rendering unenforceable an oral promise to reconvey realty, cannot be circumvented merely by having the transferor say to the transferee in the presence of a third person that he has confidence that transferee will reconvey the property at transferor's request.—Stewart v. Hooks, 94 A.2d 756, 372 Pa. 542.

Life use

Verbal agreement that if husband would have his interest in his deceased wife's property conveyed to defendants, to whom property was subsequently conveyed, he would be permitted to occupy property during rest of his life, did not raise constructive trust to extent of life use which would be enforceable in husband's favor, notwithstanding statute of frauds, where there was no finding of fraudulent intent not to keep agreement at time it was made.—Reynolds v. Reynolds, 183 A. 394, 121 Conn. 153.

Incidental promise

Equity will not declare a constructive trust on nonperformance of an incidental promise made in connection with purchase of land, which has no bearing on nature of the title or interest intended to be conveyed, although such promise may constitute part of the consideration.—Atkinson v. Atkinson, 33 S.E.2d 666, 225 N.C. 120.

Abortive attempt to reconvey

Conveyance of realty by husband to his wife for protection of her and their children while he was confined in prison did not give rise to a constructive trust in the realty in favor of the husband, notwithstanding wife on her deathbed made an abortive attempt to reconvey the realty to the husband—Moore v. Terry, 170 S.W.2d 29, 293 Ky. 727.

Passage of title

Promises by one purchasing land from his brother to pay annually to brother half the net proceeds of farm and mill, and half of profits of timber cut, and to permit brother to purchase the entire place at any time with a reasonable profit, were not conditions on passing of full beneficial title by subsequent deed, and did not warrant declaration of constructive trust because of their nonperformance.—Atkinson v. Motive held immaterial

In action by grantee and her husband to try title, wherein defendants filed similar cross-action asserting ownership as devisee of grantor, and attacking deed on ground that it had been executed for purpose of qualifying grantor for old age pension with agreement that grantee would hold in trust and reconvey on request, where grantor had not received such pension, question of right of recovery of land by reason of such alleged trust was not governed by motive which may have prompted execution of deed.—Cald-

its breach, there is some element of fraud or bad faith which makes it inequitable that the grantee should hold the title absolutely and discharged of any trust.²¹ It is not necessary that actual fraud be shown for equity to regard the grantee as holding lands charged with a constructive trust and to compel him to fulfill the trust by conveying according to his engagement, but it is necessary only to establish such conduct and bad faith as would shock the conscience of the court.²²

Generally, a constructive trust will be raised where at the time the promise is made the grantee does not intend to perform it, or it is intentionally false,²³ or where confidential relationships exist between the parties and there is no other consideration for the conveyance except the promise,²⁴ or

Other statement of rule

If inter vivos transfer of interest in land pursuant to oral trust, or oral agreement to reconvey, was procured by fraud, misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, or mistake of such character that the transferor is entitled to restitution, transferee who refuses to perform trust or agreement holds interest on a constructive trust for transferor.

Creation of interest in third person

A constructive trust arising on oral agreement to convey land to third person comes into existence only if transferee by fraud, duress, or undue influence, induced transferor not to create enforceable interest in third person.—Jones v. Felix, 23 N.E.2d 706, 372 Ill. 262.

Fiduciary relationship

The existence of a fiduciary relationship between plaintiffs and defendant was not a necessary prerequisite to establishment of a constructive trust on estate for benefit of plaintiffs—Simmons v. Wilson, Tex. Civ.App., 216 S.W.2d 847.

22. D.C.—Mandley v. Backer, 121 F.2d 875, 73 App.D.C. 412.

Active conduct by grantee to bring about conveyance, especially where there is a fiduciary relationship, and grantee's subsequent failure to carry out his agreement to hold in trust for reconveyance tend to show fraud or bad faith by the grantee, so as to raise a constructive trust.—Coleman v. Kierbow, 54 So.2d 915, 212 Miss. 541.

Fraud implied

A trustee's fraud in procuring trust property is implied, where he obtained title thereto with definite promises to carry out trustor's wishes with respect to its management and reconvey it to trustor on request, but failed and refused to do so.

Fraud

(1) Fraud, giving rise to constructive trust in land conveyed on oral trust, may consist of grantee's intention not to perform his agreement and be evidenced by his subsequent refusal to perform, together with other circumstances, such as activity in procuring conveyance.—Cohen v. Cohen, 73 A.2d 872, 195 Md. 520.

(2) Where owner of one-fourth interest in land desired to purchase another one-half interest, and received a deed from person owning the remaining one-quarter interest on representation that first person needed whole title to borrow sufficient funds to complete the purchase, and thereafter first person refused to reconvey, first person acquired and retained interest of person owning the remaining one-quarter interest by fraud, and became a trustee thereof for his benefit.—Strausburg v. Connor, 215 P.2d 509, 96 Cal.App.2d 398.

No disparity of mental capacity

A person obtaining property by making false promise for purpose of inducing another to transfer property to promisor with intent to violate such promise, is guilty of such fraud as to constitute him a constructive trustee for transferor's benefit, even though there is no disparity of mental capacity or confidential relationship between parties.—Sykes v. Absence of fraud or undue influence

Where property is conveyed to person on his oral promise to hold it and later reconvey it to others, and at time of conveyance he stands in a confidential relationship to others, a court of equity will not allow him to keep property and be unjustly enriched, but will compel him to transfer title to parties equitably entitled to it even though he may have intended at time of conveyance to carry out agreement, and even though he was not guilty of fraud, undue influence, or any other abuse of confidential relationship in procuring conveyance.

Promise to support or to reconvey

The law of constructive trusts applies equally to land conveyed under a promise to furnish support as well as to land conveyed under an agreement for reconveyance although in each case a fiduciary or confidential relationship must have existed between grantor and grantee, and such relationship must appear as an ingredient of the constructive fraud practiced.—Ampuero v. Luce, 167 P.2d 899, 68 Cal.App.2d 811.

Mother and son

Acceptance of deed from mother by son with knowledge that another son promised the mother that the sons would reconvey the realty to her, bound son, who did not make the promise to the promise previously made by the other son—Airola v. Gorham, 133 P.2d 78, 56 Cal.App.2d 42.

Husband and wife

(1) Although husband's parol agreement to receive, invest, and reinvest wife's funds for her benefit and hold proceeds subject to her demand is unenforceable as an express trust, implied trust arising out of delivery of funds to husband under such agreement is enforceable in equity and parol agreement may be shown to rebut inference of a gift by wife to husband.—Allen v. Allen, 27 S.E.2d 679, 196 Ga. 736.

(2) The facts and circumstances surrounding transaction under which decedent's wife to whom realty was transferred recognized constructive trust under which wife held the realty for the decedent, and conveyed the realty to the decedent's estate, were required to be tested by the current conditions and not by conditions which developed in succeeding years by factors which seriously affected value and income of realty.—In re Wechsler's Estate, 13 N.Y.S.2d 940, 171 Misc. 738.

When rule inapplicable

The rule that one receiving land on an oral trust while standing in a confidential relationship to the transferor, and refusing to perform, will be deemed a constructive trustee for the transferor, is inapplicable where the transferee subsequently executes a memorandum evidencing the trust, or confesses it in the course of litigation, since the statute of frauds is then satisfied and the express trust becomes enforceable.—Shaffer v. Notice of purpose of conveyance

Where stepfather conveyed land to stepdaughter on alleged promise of stepfather's wife that property would be held for stepfather and would be reconveyed on request, delivery of stepfather's deed to stepdaughter by wife put stepdaughter on inquiry as to purpose of the conveyance, with respect to whether property was impressed with trust in favor of stepfather.—Orella v. the land exceeds the amount of the debt.²⁶ The promise need not be express in order to raise a trust, silent acquiescence on the part of the grantee being sufficient where he has knowledge of the grantor's intention and understanding of the transaction.²⁷ One for whose benefit a promise is made cannot enforce a trust, however, where he subsequently makes a new arrangement with the alleged trustee of the nature of a novation.²⁸ A constructive trust based on repudiation of an oral promise to reconvey property does not arise until the transferee repudiates the promise or dies.²⁹

Other statement of rule

A trust is not created by a mere promise to purchase and hold property for the benefit of another, or convey it to him if the promisee does not rely thereon to his disadvantage, or is not thereby lulled into false security.—Emerson v. Ayres, 120 S.W.2d 16, 196 Ark. 791.

Tax title

(1) The alleged oral promise of persons holding title to land under patents issued by state which had acquired tax title to land, to reconvey land to person who was owner prior to tax sale, on owner's repayment of money paid out for patents, did not create constructive trust in favor of owner, in view of statute of frauds.—Lewis v. Williams, 191 So. 479, 186 Miss. 701.

(2) Where defendant purchased land from county which had been sold to county at a tax resale and land originally belonged to decedent, oral agreement to permit decedent's estate to purchase the property either outright or on certain conditions did not justify the court in enforcing a constructive trust in favor of the estate where there was no fraud or fiduciary relationship between the parties.—Bingham v. Worley, 149 P.2d 253, 194 Okl. 238.

Contract to share profits

Complaint alleging written contract to share profits to be derived from sale of realty purchased by defendants under option obtained by plaintiffs and transferred to defendants, failure of defendants to pay purchase-money notes and sale of realty to defendants under trust deed given as security for notes disclosed no basis for holding defendants accountable to plaintiffs for an interest in realty or profits as constructive trustees, in absence of allegation of facts showing fraud or that defendants had any contractual duty to protect plaintiffs' interest in the profits.—Mulligan v. Wilson, 229 P.2d 858, 103 Cal.App.2d 664.

Termination of negotiations

Where plaintiff who had lost property through foreclosure of mechanics' liens sought to induce defendant to repurchase property for plaintiff, but negotiations were terminated because parties could not agree on manner in which plaintiff was to repay money, constructive trust did not result when thereafter defendant purchased property for himself.—Miovsky v. Georgeoff, 2 N.E.2d 740, 363 Ill. 60.

Payment of consideration

A constructive trust does not inevitably result from the payment of consideration alone when title is taken in another's name but is imposed by a court of equity as a consequence

rule, where a person having no interest in particular real estate orally agrees with another that the latter shall purchase it with his own funds, taking the title in his own name, and shall thereafter convey it to the first person no constructive trust arises,³¹ the trust, if any, being an express one which is unenforceable under the statute of frauds.³²

In order to give rise to a constructive trust under such an agreement, the promisee must have lost or surrendered some right or omitted some act for his own protection, relying on the promise, by virtue whereof the promisor has been able to acquire the legal title in himself,³³ or he must have been induced, at the instance of the promisor, to incur some expense or perform some act which he otherwise would not have done.³⁴ Thus, where one having an interest in land agrees with another that the latter shall purchase such land in his own name and thereafter hold it for, or convey it to, the former, and by reason of such agreement the person having such interest takes no steps to protect it, and the land is acquired by such other person, a constructive trust may be enforced against him if he refuses to carry out his promise;³⁵ and where one purchases land under an agreement to convey it to another, and the latter, with the former's knowledge and consent, enters on the land and makes valuable improvements thereon, the promisor holds the title as a constructive trustee.³⁶

Where relationship of confidence exists, however, between one agreeing to purchase land and convey it to another, and the person to whom he agrees to convey it, a constructive trust arises in favor of the promisee,³⁷ provided he himself has not been guilty of payment in connection with other existing equities.—In re Buehler's Estate, 59 N.Y.S.2d 766, 186 Misc. 306, affirmed 70 N.Y.S.2d 139, 272 App. Div. 767, appeal denied 73 N.Y.S.2d 485, 272 App. Div. 794.

Division

Purchase of land by one party to alleged oral agreement for him to acquire title to the land and then divide it with other party to agreement, who was to contribute no money to enterprise until his portion of land was conveyed to him, did not give rise to a constructive trust not subject to statute of frauds.—DeMarco v. Lease

A person's act in securing for himself a lease which he had been orally engaged to secure for another would not create constructive trust for such other, since trust in such case must arise solely from oral agreement and is unenforceable under statute.—Yamnis v. Change of position

Although a simple avowal of acquisition for use of another will not support an allegation of trust, if one be induced to confide in the promise of another that he will hold in trust, or that he will purchase for both, and is thus led to change his position in reliance thereon so that promisor becomes holder of legal title, an attempted denial of the confidence is such fraud as will operate to convert the purchaser into a trustee ex maleficio.—Rome v. Fincke, Fla., 53 So. 2d 712.

Dismissal of suit

If former husband procured dismissal of suit for breach of promise to marry former wife by falsely representing to her that he had purchased realty for her which he would convey to her, constructive trust of realty would result in former wife's favor.—Hoffner v. Hoffner, 221 S.W. 2d 907, 32 Tenn. App. 98.

Denial of confidence as fraud

Although a simple avowal of acquisition of land for use of another whether made contemporaneously with or subsequent to the fact will not of itself support an allegation of trust, if one can be induced to confide in the promise of another that he will hold in trust or that he will so purchase for one or both, and is thus led to forbear what he contemplated doing in acquisition of an estate whereby the promisor becomes holder of the legal title, an attempted denial of the confidence is such a fraud as will convert purchaser into a trustee ex maleficio.—Poe v. Poe, 256 P.2d 153, 208 Okl. 406—Raper v. Thorn, 211 P.2d 1007, 202 Okl. 235, 14 A.L.R.2d 1260.

Sheriff's deed

Where holder of sheriff's deed gave plaintiff option to purchase realty on or before certain date, and defendant agreed to loan plaintiff money to purchase realty, and defendant paid holder of sheriff's deed for the realty in behalf of plaintiff, and holder of sheriff's deed conveyed realty to defendant, an implied trust arose in favor of plaintiff.—Johnson v. Burke, S.D., 63 N.W.2d 794.

Mineral lease

A promise by mineral lessor, made through agent who concealed their identity but was allegedly authorized by them, to make locations on adjoining lands for benefit of lessors, was as binding on lessors as though directly made, and made lessors and their agents trustees for benefit of lessors.—Neet v. Holmes, 154 P.2d 854, 25 Cal.2d 447.

Breach of trust

(1) One who, in breach of trust to pay balance of purchase price for realty and obtain deed in name of person furnishing money, took legal title in his own name, held such title of fraud in connection with the transaction.³⁸ Thus, where one advances money to or for another for the purchase of land, and to secure the loan takes title to the land in himself, agreeing to convey it to the borrower on repayment of the money advanced, equity will declare the lender a trustee for the borrower, and compel him to reconvey the land on payment of the loan, although the contract rests entirely in parol.³⁹

Similarly, where it is orally agreed between two persons that land shall be purchased for their joint account, but one obtains title in his own name,⁴⁰ or represents to the other that the sum contributed by the latter toward the purchase price is only half thereof, when in fact it is the whole price paid,⁴¹ a constructive trust may be raised. So also, where one person pays the consideration for property purchased but causes it to be conveyed to another with whom he is in a confidential relationship, on the latter's promise to reconvey the property to him⁴² or to hold it for particular purposes,⁴³ or where one person agrees to buy land for another with the latter's funds but wrongfully takes title in his own name,⁴⁴ a constructive trust arises in favor of the person defrauded, even though the rule of the common law that the payment by one person of the consideration for a conveyance to another creates a resulting trust, discussed supra §§ 115-130, has been abolished by statute, the abolition of result-as "trustee" for person furnishing the purchase money.—Banks v. Morse, 134 P.2d 952, 17 Wash 2d 18.

(2) Where land was conveyed to one of defendants individually instead of as trustee for himself and plaintiffs as agreed in declaration of trust, trust relationship arose.—Grossett v. McQueen, 169 S.E. 829, 205 N.C. 48.

Proportionate lien

Where one whose confidence has been abused by another who has orally agreed to reconvey realty has paid part of the consideration and paid only, a lien proportionate to the value thus contributed will be charged on the realty.—*Foreman v. Fraud

If husband's name should have been included as a purchaser in contract for purchase of realty naming wife as sole purchaser, the omission of husband's name constituted a fraud in law or a constructive fraud giving rise to a constructive trust in favor of husband.—Proffit v. Houseworth, 231 S.W.2d 612, 360 Mo. 947.

Mineral lease

Relationship between parties as shown by allegation and proof that defendant was to purchase mineral lease and take title in name of plaintiff and defendant, with plaintiffs jointly having an undivided one-half interest, and defendant, an undivided one-half interest, and that plaintiffs were to be liable for one-half obligation of lease and to own one-half of lease, and that defendant violated agreement by taking title in defendant's name only, and that defendant subsequently repudiated agreement, was sufficient to give rise to constructive trust.—Fitz-Gerald v. Hull, 237 S.W.2d 256, 150 Tex. 39.

Acquiescence

However, oral agreement by defendant to purchase and operate property as partnership or corporation to be organized by plaintiff and defendant was held not to create constructive trust for plaintiff's benefit, where plaintiff acquiesced in defendant's taking title in own name, and made no offer to advance or assume any part of purchase price prior to conveyance to and resale by defendant.—*Wax v. Furnishing of home for life

Where mother and her daughter and son-in-law pooled their assets to build a new house, with understanding that title should be in daughter and son-in-law and that mother should be furnished a home for life in consideration of money that she had put in venture, and thereafter conduct of daughter and son-in-law forced mother to leave the house, the property would be impressed with a constructive trust for purpose of requiring daughter and son-in-law to pay to mother a sum equal to six per cent per annum on amount invested by her in the house, with provision that trust should cease after mother's death and the corpus be paid to daughter absolutely.—Long v. Huseman, 47 A.2d 75, 186 Md. 495

Interest in lease

Parties contemplating joint purchase or lease of land may orally agree to such an undertaking in advance, and may orally agree, for valuable consideration passing from one to the other, that deeds or leases acquired shall be taken in one of them, but that interest of each shall be in a named proportion; and party in whose name the deed is taken, as between himself and the other party, holds interest in trust for party unnamed in the deed.—*Newton v. ing trusts in such cases not preventing a constructive trust from arising.⁴⁵

b. Purchase at Judicial or Other Like Sale

Where a person having an interest in land, confiding in the parol promise of another that he will purchase the land, at an impending judicial or other like sale, for the benefit of the former or of some third person, takes no steps to protect his interest in the property, but allows the promisor to acquire the land at such sale, a constructive trust arises, and may be enforced on a subsequent refusal to carry the promise into execution; but a mere verbal agreement to purchase for another at a judicial sale creates no constructive trust where there is no showing of actual or constructive fraud.

Where a person having an interest in land, confiding in the parol promise of another that he will purchase the land, at an impending judicial sale, foreclosure sale, tax sale, or the like, for the benefit of the former or of some third person in whom he has an interest, takes no steps to protect his interest in the property, but allows the promisor to acquire the land at such sale, a constructive trust

arises, and may be enforced on a subsequent denial of the promise or refusal to carry it into execution,⁴⁶ especially where, the promise being made known at the sale, there is less or no competition and the land is obtained at a low price;⁴⁷ and this rule applies even though the promisor in making the promise is moved merely by friendly or benevolent considerations.⁴⁸ As otherwise expressed, a trust will be implied if a confidential relationship exists between the parties, or if other circumstances exist which make it inequitable that the purchaser at the judicial sale should retain the title for himself.⁴⁹

On the other hand, a mere verbal agreement to purchase for another at a judicial sale creates no constructive trust,⁵⁰ at least where there is no showing of actual or constructive fraud,⁵¹ or payment of the purchase money by the promisee;⁵² and, unless the influence of such promise operates at the sale, in inducing the promisee to refrain from protecting his interest or in enabling the promisor to

Purchase for joint benefit

(1) Where plaintiff and defendant entered into agreement whereby plaintiff dropped out of bidding at judicial sale and defendant bid on behalf of both, each to have a one-half interest in the property, in event defendant was successful, on payment of one-half the bid price by plaintiff to defendant, defendant held a one-half interest in property as constructive trustee for plaintiff

—Rome v. Fincke, Fla., 53 So.2d 712.

(2) Where heirs held joint title to an undivided interest in certain land which was being sold at judicial sale, and a group of the heirs and their spouses, including defendant, entered into a joint adventure to purchase property at such sale for benefit of all, although all the heirs did not sign agreement or authorize defendant to act for them, defendant could not repudiate his responsibility to other heirs after his purchase of property at such sale, and any heir had right to ratify purchase or elect to take his share of proceeds of judicial sale.—Whitell v. Porter, 217 S.W.2d 311, 309 Ky. 247.

Purchase by tenant

A tenant who agreed to protect landlords for period of lease against foreclosure of trust deed and to advance the money and buy the property at foreclosure sale and hold the property for landlords, and who purchased at foreclosure sale and refused to convey to landlords offering to repay tenant, held the land subject to constructive trust resting on fraud or wrongdoing.—*Rankin v. Occupation of property

An oral agreement by debtor's brother, who purchased debtor's realty at sheriff's sale with his own money, to reconvey realty to debtor on theory of resulting trust was within the statute of frauds, and was not taken without the statute because debtor continued to occupy property after alleged agreement was entered into and paid a sum of money to brother on account of purchase price and also expended moneys for minor repairs to the property, taxes, etc., since such possession was not referable to the agreement and moneys expended could be recovered in a proper proceeding.—*Moyer v. secure the property to his own advantage, no trust arises.⁵³ So no trust is created by a mere promise to purchase and hold property for the benefit of another or convey it to him if the promisee does not rely thereon to his disadvantage or is not thereby lulled into a false security;⁵⁴ nor is any trust created by a promise made after the purchase,⁵⁵ since the mere violation of a promise to convey property to the promisee is not such fraud as to give rise to a constructive trust, as discussed supra § 149. Moreover, where neither party to an agreement that one will purchase property at a judicial sale and convey it to the other has any interest in the property, and no money is advanced by the promisee to the promisor, nor anything done toward carrying the agreement into effect, the purchase of the property at the sale does not constitute the purchaser a trustee ex maleficio for the promisee,⁵⁶ in view of the general rule relating to oral agreements to purchase property and convey it to another, discussed supra subdivision a of this section.

Sufficiency of promise. A mere statement by an execution creditor, purchasing the property at judicial sale, that he does not intend to hold the title as against the debtor or persons to whom he may convey the property if the amount due him is paid within a reasonable time does not create any trust relationship between the parties, in the absence of any sinister or unfair purpose in making the statement, or of any advantage gained thereby.⁵⁷

One general class of constructive trusts consists of those cases in which the existence of a confidential relationship and the subsequent abuse of the confidence reposed are sufficient to establish such trust, relief being granted in order to prevent fraud or unjust enrichment on the part of the fiduciary.

Duties and liabilities of trustees generally see infra §§ 247-254.

Fidelity required

In transfer of property, if there is evidence of strong affection, high regard, and great confidence in business and personal integrity of transferee, relationship demands a high degree of fidelity on part of transferee--Adams v. Bloom, 142 P.2d 775, 61 Cal.App.2d 315.

Good faith

(1) A confidential relationship demands the best of good faith in business dealings, but there must be a breach of good faith before a cause of action to establish constructive trust in real estate arises--Georges v. Loutis, 145 F.2d 901, 20 Wash 2d 92.

(2) The utmost good faith must be shown by one in any confidential relationship, such as the relationship of parishioner and clergyman, even though not technically a fiduciary, in order to support a gift of money or anything of value obtained from one who has reposed trust and confidence--Nelson v. Dodge, 68 A.2d 51, 76 R.I. 1, 14 A.L.R.2d 638.

(3) The good faith required by a fiduciary relationship arises only after relationship is created, and not while negotiation is pending--Kaiser v. Newsom, Tex Civ App., 108 S.W.2d 766, error dismissed.

Personal advantage

(1) The law forbids a trustee and all other persons occupying a fiduciary or quasi fiduciary position from taking any personal advantage touching the thing or subject as to which such fiduciary position exists.

Ark--McHugh v. Jeffries, 183 S.W.2d 309, 207 Ark 890.

Cal--In re Kromrey's Estate, 220 P.2d 805, 98 Cal App 2d 639.

(2) A party voluntarily assuming confidential relationship towards another cannot thereafter do any act for his own gain at expense of that relationship.

Ill--McDonnell v. Holden, 185 N.E. 572, 352 Ill. 362.

N.Y.--In re Yasilonis' Estate, 125 N.Y.S.2d 363, 204 Misc 755.

(3) A fiduciary cannot benefit by dealing with his beneficiaries to their disadvantage--Winger v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 67 N.E.2d 265, 394 Ill. 94.

(4) If one who while acting in a confidential capacity with another induces the other to enter into a contract which is to the advantage of the fiduciary, fiduciary in attempting to enforce the contract would have burden of proving that such contract is fair and reasonable and that he did not take any advantage of his confidential relationship--Potter v. Daily, 40 N.E.2d 339, 220 Ind. 43.

Use of information

Anyone who, in a fiduciary relation, has acquired information concerning business or property of his correlate is prohibited from using that knowledge or interest to prevent correlate from accomplishing purpose of the relationship--U. S. v. Bennett, D.C. Wash., 57 F.Supp 676.

Fraud

If one occupying a fiduciary relationship such as trustee deals with subject-matter of the relationship and thereby gains an advantage to himself, he will be deemed guilty of fraud, either actual or constructive, depending on his intent and purpose--Giese v. Terry, 46 N.E.2d 90, 382 Ill. 34.

R.I.--Nelson v. Dodge, 68 A.2d 51, 76 R.I. 1, 14 A.L.R.2d 638.

Study of circumstances

The court has duty to study with care the particular circumstances where a close relationship exists between parties one of whom is asserting constructive trust by reason of confidential relationship--Evelyn v. Alleyne, 118 N.Y.S.2d 839.

Other statements of rule

(1) Equity will construct a trust in order to satisfy the demands of justice when one who occupies a fiduciary or confidential relationship abuses it and by fraud or over-reaching gains some advantage to himself.—Strates v. Dimotsis, C.C.A.Tex., 110 F.2d 374, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 24, 311 U.S. 666, 85 L.Ed. 427.

(2) In absence of evidence rebutting presumption of fraud which law implies from existence of fiduciary relationship and transaction between parties whereby dominant party receives material benefit, a court of equity, in order to remedy such fraud and work out justice between the parties, will fashion constructive trust in favor of defrauded party upon property in hands of donee which he has received as result of transaction.—Clark v. Clark, 76 N.E.2d 446, 398 Ill. 592.

(3) Where a person obtains title to property by virtue of a confidential relationship and influence, under such circumstances that he ought not, according to equity and good conscience, enjoy beneficial interests of the property, courts of equity, to administer complete justice, will raise a trust by construction. Ill.—Stein v. Stein, 75 N.E.2d 869, 398 Ill. 397.

Neb.—Paul v. McGahan, 42 N.W.2d 172, 152 Neb. 578—Maddox v. Maddox, 38 N.W.2d 517, 151 Neb. 626—McCormick v. McCormick, 33 N.W.2d 543, 150 Neb. 190—Watkins v. Waits, 28 N.W.2d 206, 148 Neb. 513—In re Scott's Estate, 26 N.W.2d 799, 148 Neb. 182—Box v. Box, 21 N.W.2d 868, 146 Neb. 826.

Nev.—Davidson v. Streeter, 234 P.2d 793, 68 Nev. 427.

(4) A constructive trust is raised by a court of equity whenever a person, clothed with a fiduciary character, gains some personal advantage by availing himself of a situation as trustee; since, as it is impossible that a trustee should be allowed to make a profit by his office, it follows that as soon as the advantage in question is shown to have been acquired through the medium of a trust, the trustee, however good a legal title he may have, will be decreed in equity to hold for the benefit of his cestui que trust.—Burton v. Burton, 51 N.W.2d 297, 332 Mich. 326.

(5) Even though the existence of a fiduciary relationship does not in itself give rise to a constructive trust, it is frequently an important consideration in holding that an abuse of confidence rendering retention of property by one person unconscionable against another is a proper predicate for granting equitable relief in form of declaration and enforcement of a constructive trust.—Central Bus Lines v. Hamilton Nat. Bank, 239 S.W.2d 583, 34 Tenn.App. 480.

Contract

Equity courts presume that contracts between parties bearing such relationships to each other as prohibit them from contracting between themselves are fraudulent and convert parties guilty of fraud into trustees.—Beattie v. Bower, 287 N.W. 900, 290 Mich. 517.

cestui que trust may enforce or renounce at his option,⁶² unless he has waived the breach of faith, in which case no trust exists or can be enforced.⁶³

An abuse of the confidential relationship ordinarily is sufficient without more to authorize the enforcement of the trust, irrespective of any legal or equitable interest by either party, during the relation, in the property subsequently acquired,⁶⁴ and it is of no consequence that the constructive trustee acted in good faith or without actual intent to defraud,⁶⁵ or that the transaction could not have been impeached if the confidential relation had not existed.⁶⁶ Broadly speaking, a constructive trust may arise whenever influence has been acquired and is abused or confidence has been reposed and is betrayed,⁶⁷ and relief by way of constructive trust

may be granted wherever there is an abuse of confidence regardless of the way in which the particular transaction arises,⁶⁸ and regardless whether benefit from the transaction inured personally to the dominant party.⁶⁹ So it is not necessary, in order to warrant the raising of a constructive trust on the ground of abuse of trust, that the parties standing in a confidential relationship be grantor and grantee.⁷⁰

Generally, a constructive trust arises when one person, occupying a fiduciary position, or having placed himself in such position in relation to another that good faith requires him to act for the other and not for himself, fraudulently or wrongfully acquires the title to the property in himself, in place of the cestui que trust.⁷¹ So if a person standing in

Conveyance

(1) If a conveyance is obtained by virtue of a fiduciary relationship, equity converts the grantee into a trustee of the legal title.—Stusch v. Romza, 55 N.E.2d 81, 387 Ill. 67.

(2) Where it is sought to impose a constructive trust upon an unconditional conveyance of realty, the existence of a confidential relationship between grantor and grantee is of major importance to be considered in connection with other facts and circumstances in the case.—Johnson v. Larson, N.D., 56 N.W.2d 750.—McDonald v. Miller, 16 N.W.2d 270, 73 N.D. 474, 156 A.L.R. 1328.

Recovery in action

A plaintiff bringing action in behalf of and as agent or trustee of person who was made a nominal defendant but who was in fact a plaintiff, must turn over to such defendant any amount recovered in the action.—Ziegler v. Von Sebo, 66 N.Y.S.2d 900, 271 App.Div. 604.

Capacity in which sued

Alleged confidential relationship between administratrix as individual and payee of note executed by deceased to purchase cattle was immaterial, with respect to payee's right to impress trust on cattle, in suit against administratrix in her representative capacity.—Hanson v. Beaver, 251 N.W. 894, 62 S.D. 115.

63. Wis.—Rightman v. Watson, 136 N.W. 797, 150 Wis. 385.

Knowledge of facts

There can be no breach of fiduciary relation, as required to create trust where all facts are disclosed and party complaining acts with knowledge thereof.—Kenshaw v. Tracy Loan & Trust Co., 35 P.2d 298, 87 Utah 359, modified on other

Constructive fraud

(1) Where a confidential relationship exists, courts will scrutinize the conduct of the parties more closely, and in such cases even constructive fraud may be sufficient to support a constructive trust.—Cavallaro v. Lewis, 98 N.Y.S.2d 730, 198 Misc. 412.

(2) Constructive fraud exists where fiduciary has no actual intent to defraud but is held liable irrespective of intent because of fiduciary relationship.—Gendler v. Sibley State Bank, D.C.Iowa, 62 F.Supp. 805.

Unfair persuasion

Where one party is under the domination of another, or by virtue of the relation between them is justified in assuming that the other party will not act in a manner inconsistent with his welfare, transaction induced by unfair persuasion of the latter is voidable, and court will impose a constructive trust.—*Troyak v. Obligation connected with transaction

A constructive trust will arise where an interest in property is pur-

a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation to a lessee secures a renewal of the lease, or a new lease, to himself, a court of equity will treat him as holding the lease in trust for the original lessee.⁷² Also, where one person, by deceiving another with whom he is in a confidential relationship as to the purchase price of property, acquires an interest therein, he is accountable as a trustee for such other person;⁷³ where one makes use of an influential or confidential relation which he holds toward the owner of property to obtain title thereto from him on more advantageous terms than he could otherwise obtain it, equity will convert him into a trustee;⁷⁴ and where the owner of a part interest in property obtains title in his own name to the whole thereof, he is a trustee for his coowners as to their respective interests.⁷⁵ Profits wrongfully diverted from a joint chased by one standing in a fiduciary relation to another and the scope of the former's obligation as a fiduciary is closely connected with the transaction.—Lipinski v. Lipinski, 35 N.W.2d 708, 227 Minn. 511.

Intent immaterial

If one takes title in his own name, while acting as agent, trustee, or guardian, or in any other fiduciary capacity, court of equity will subject property to proper trusts in his hands, or compel him to transfer title to party equitably entitled to it, and it is immaterial whether party takes title in his own name in good faith, under belief that he can thereby better manage property to advantage of those for whom he is acting, or in compliance with their wishes, or whether from an intention to defraud them of their rights therein, and in either case a court of equity will control legal title so as to protect just rights of true owners.—Potter v. Lindsay, 60 N.W.2d 133, 337 Mich. 404.—Burton v. Burton, 51 N.W.2d 297, 332 Mich. 326.

Purchase from third person

A person in a fiduciary relation to another who purchases realty for himself individually, may be chargeable as constructive trustee of the property, even though he purchases it from a third person and not from himself as fiduciary.

Reversion of leased property

Where partner buys reversion of leased property upon which partnership business is conducted, property is regarded as personal property for purpose of paying debts and adjusting equities between partners, and partner holds legal title as trustee for partnership in respect to such personality until debts and claims between partners are paid, then he holds legal title to remainder as trustee for benefit of persons interested.—Boxill v. Boxill, 111 N.Y. S.2d 33, 201 Misc. 386.

Use of confidential information

(1) A fiduciary acquiring property, in violation of his duty to trust beneficiary, through use of confidential information, holds it on constructive trust for beneficiary.

Idaho.—Penton v. King Hill Irr. Dist., 186 P.2d 477, 67 Idaho 456.

(2) The law peremptorily forbids one who, in a fiduciary relation, has acquired information concerning, or interest in business or property of his correlate from using that knowledge or interest to prevent correlate from accomplishing purpose of the relation, and, if one violates such prohibition, law charges the interest or property which he acquires in such way with a trust for benefit of other party to the relation.

Mo.—State ex rel Duggan v. Kirkwood, 208 S.W.2d 257, 357 Mo. 325, 2 A.L.R.2d 216.

Use of own funds

Where one person stands in a fiduciary relationship to another the use of his own funds in acquiring title to property will not prevent his being held as a trustee of legal title since it must be assumed that he did so by virtue of such relationship and for the benefit of such other person.

Sublease

(1) Where part of consideration of sublease was recognition that lessee might renew lease on same or other terms, and that sublease would be renewed on same terms or in ratio of changed terms, and sublessee began to negotiate for new lease from lessor within a month after becoming a sublessee and entered into new lease a year and three months before expiration date of his sublease, sublessee held the new lease as trustee for lessee subject to benefits to sublessee as provided in sublease.—Risk v. Risher, 19 So.2d 484, 197 Miss. 155.

(2) It has been held, however, that in the absence of special circumstances, a sublessee's relation to sublessor is not fiduciary within rule that where fiduciary acquires renewal of lease equity will impose constructive trust in favor of prior lessee.

Condition and quality of interest

If an attorney, by statements and representations to his clients as to the condition and quality of their interest in an estate, procures the sale thereof to a third person for whom the attorney is acting at the same time as an attorney, for an inadequate price, a court of equity will set aside the transaction and restore the interest in the estate to the clients on repayment of the purchase price with the legal rate of interest, whether the attorney acts on information derived from the client or from any other source, since the attorney is affected with a trust and the matter is grounded on public policy and not necessarily on fraud.—*Zimmer v. adventure are subject to a constructive trust.⁷⁶

Property with respect to which one stands in a fiduciary relation ordinarily cannot be purchased and held by him for his own benefit, as against the cestui que trust;⁷⁷ but this rule has been held subject to the exception that an agent or trustee may lawfully buy the property of his principal or cestui que trust at a judicial sale, brought about by a third person, which he has no part in procuring and over which he can exercise no control,⁷⁸ and it does not apply where property held by one trustee is purchased by another and distinct trustee of other property held for the same cestui.⁷⁹ Factors important in determining whether a particular transaction is fair and just include a showing by the fiduciary that he has made a free and frank disclosure of all relevant information which he had, that the consideration was adequate, and that the principal had competent and independent advice before completing the transaction.⁸⁰ So where there is a duty to speak because of a trust or confidential relationship, the failure to do so is a species of fraud for which equity may afford relief by way of a constructive trust.⁸¹

A person is not chargeable as a trustee, however, because of a fiduciary relation unless he has been guilty of some wrong;⁸² and so ordinarily no trust arises, because of a confidential relation, where there is no fraud or abuse of confidence or influence,⁸³ or where the confidential relationship has terminated

Joint adventure

Where one joint adventurer tortiously took in his own name title to lands purchased by both in equal shares, constructive trust, and not resulting trust, arose in favor of other joint adventurer, even though he advanced practically entire payments, so that title holder was trustee only of undivided half belonging to other joint adventurer, and not of entire property.—Reid v. Keator, 39 P.2d 926, 55 Idaho 172.

Partners

Where contract for sale of real estate named five joint purchasers, confidential relation of one toward his colleagues and his obligation to protect their joint rights did not extend so far as to require him to pay whole consideration when other purchasers failed to pay their share on day for closing transaction and thereafter such purchaser was free to act as he chose with respect to the property without regard to the others.—*Sonek v. before the transaction by which the property is acquired.⁸⁴ Accordingly, even if a confidential relation exists, a conveyance to the dominant party by the dependent party will not be affected, unless by means of such fiduciary relation undue advantage has been taken of the grantor;⁸⁵ and a conveyance executed by a dependent party to a dominant party is valid if executed with full knowledge of its nature and effect and through the deliberate and voluntary desire of the grantor.⁸⁶ The confidential relationship which amounts to a trust, once assumed, continues until discharged either by operation of law, by an order of a tribunal having requisite jurisdiction, or pursuant to a valid agreement of parties in interest who are fully competent to contract and fully conversant with all the facts and with their respective rights and duties.⁸⁷

b. What Constitutes Confidential or Fiduciary Relationship

A confidential relationship, or fiduciary relationship, within the meaning of the rule that a constructive trust arises from the abuse or violation of such a relationship exists wherever confidence is reposed on one side and there is a resulting superiority and influence on the other, and it is not limited to conventional trusteeships and other recognized legal relationships of trust and confidence.

In general, a confidential relationship, or fiduciary relationship, the two terms being ordinarily used interchangeably,⁸⁸ within the meaning of the rule

Utah.—Renshaw v. Tracy Loan & Trust Co., 49 P.2d 403, 87 Utah 364, 100 A.L.R. 359, 65 C.J. p 479 note 39.

Elements of cause of action

(1) The elements of a cause of action to enforce a constructive trust are existence of fiduciary relation and abuse by defendant of confidence and trust bestowed under it to plaintiff's harm, and a constructive trust cannot be adjudged where an element of cause of action for its enforcement is lacking.—Wilcox v. Nelson, 35 N.W.2d 741, 227 Minn. 545.

(2) The only indispensable elements of a good cause of action to enforce constructive trust are a fiduciary relation and the use by one of the parties of the knowledge or interest he acquired through it to prevent the other from accomplishing the purpose of the relation.—Young v. Bradley, C.C.A.Ohio, 142 F.2d 658, certiorari denied 65 S.Ct. 130, 323 U.S. 775, 89 L.Ed. 619, motion denied 65 S.Ct. 266.

(3) Where a party does not attack in probate court sales of property made by an administrator but subsequently brings an action in district court to impress a trust on property on ground that administrator had indirectly purchased property from the estate while he was administrator, it is not only necessary to prove that administrator may have acquired property from intervening purchasers, but it must be proven that some conduct amounting to intrinsic fraud was present in connection with transactions.—Wadsworth v. Cole, Tex.Civ. App., 265 S.W.2d 628.

Undue influence

(1) Where fiduciary relation arises not from a formal trust relationship but confidence reposed by one person in another, abuse of the relationship must be shown to have arisen out of undue influence exerted by the dominant party on the subservient party to give rise to a constructive trust.—Skidmore v. Johnson, 79 N.E. 2d 762, 334 Ill.App. 347.

(2) In determining whether an attorney or any other beneficiary in a confidential relationship has met the burden of proof which the law casts on him to show that he used no undue influence or deception in a transaction, the court must consider all circumstances in each case.—Baker v. Otto, 22 A.2d 924, 180 Md. 63.

Purchase of mortgage

Where plaintiff owned realty, mortgaged far in excess of its value, and plaintiff informed lessee of that fact and also that if holder of mortgage were properly handled, the mortgage could be reduced to or bought for approximately one-half its face value, lessee by purchasing mortgage from bank which held mortgage for cash at approximately same price that plaintiff offered mortgage holder did not violate a quasi fiduciary relationship requiring impression of a trust on bond and mortgage purchased by defendant and a transfer to plaintiff.—Realty Associates v. Bickford's, Inc., 61 N.Y.S.2d 745.

New leases

(1) In order to impress constructive trust on new oil leases, which defendant had acquired for himself after expiration of old leases, in which plaintiffs and defendant had had interests, on ground that defendant violated fiduciary duty owed to plaintiffs, it was necessary that knowledge obtained by defendant, during and because of fiduciary relationship, in itself occasioned act of defendant in obtaining new leases for himself.—Smith v. Bolin, Tex.Civ. App., 261 S.W.2d 352, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds, Sup., 271 S.W.2d 93.

(2) Rules of equity applicable to those who had interests in oil and gas leases, and who were in fiduciary relationship to each other, would not be extended so as to forbid the acquisition of ownership, or development by one of the parties for his own benefit of property not embraced in the enterprise of the parties and outside its scope.—Smith v. Bolin, supra.

Reservation of life estate

Title to property conveyed by deeds containing clauses giving grantee all rents, issues, and profits from property granted was not impressed with equitable life estate in favor of grantor pursuant to oral agreement reserving life estate in rents and profits from property on ground of confidential relationship existing between grantor and grantee, in absence of showing of lack of consideration or abuse of confidence by grantee.—*Rush v. Continuing rights

Where a confidential relation is established between parties, either by act of law or agreement, rights incident to such relation continue until relation is put an end to.—Sheppard v. Sykes, 44 S.E.2d 54, 227 N.C. 606.

that a constructive trust arises from the abuse or violation of such a relationship, exists wherever confidence is reposed on one side and there is a resulting superiority and influence on the other.⁸⁹ Every relation in which the duty of fidelity to each other is imposed on the parties by established rules of law is a relation of trust,⁹⁰ and if a wrong arises in a fiduciary relationship, the same remedy exists on behalf of the injured person as would exist against a trustee on behalf of the cestui que trust.⁹¹ It has been said that there is no invariable rule which determines the existence of a confidential relationship,⁹² but that the existence of a fiduciary relationship in a particular case is to be determined by the facts established.⁹³

(5) A confidential relationship exists when one person occupies towards another such a position of advisor or counselor as reasonably to inspire confidence that he will act in good faith for the other's interest—Stewart v. Hooks, 94 A.2d 756, 372 Pa. 542—Ibrunier v. Stanert, 85 A.2d 130, 369 Pa. 178—Kahan v. Greenfield, 67 A.2d 567, 165 Pa.Super. 148—Monongahela Trust Co. v. Kazimer, 54 A.2d 841, 161 Pa.Super. 380.

(6) Generally, doctrine of confidential relation exists with respect to establishment of constructive trust, where one party is under domination of another, or where, under circumstances, such party is justified in assuming that other will not act in a manner inconsistent with his or her welfare—Bass v. Smith, 56 A.2d 800, 189 Md. 461.

(7) A confidential relation exists where there has been a special confidence reposed in one who in equity and good conscience is bound to act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the one reposing confidence—Security Trust Co. v. Wilson, 210 S.W.2d 336, 307 Ky. 152—65 C.J. p 483 note 68 [a] (2).

(8) Ordinarily a fiduciary relationship arises where one party reposes special confidence in another or where a special duty arises on the part of one to protect the interests of another—Crockett v. Root, 146 P.2d 555, 194 Okl. 3.

Funds for purchase

When plaintiff's funds passed into defendant's hands to purchase a specific tract of land, a confidential relationship was created and defendant was bound to exercise utmost good faith in use of money, regardless of whether words "trustee" or "agent" were spoken by parties in connection with transaction—Kinert v. Wright, 185 P.2d 364, 81 Cal. App.2d 919.

Continuance of status

One who voluntarily assumes a position of trust and confidence is a fiduciary, and he remains a fiduciary as long as trust and confidence are reposed in him, and such status may continue in fact in case of joint adventurers after dissolution of their association, although dissolution would normally end the fiduciary status—Sime v. Malouf, 212 P.2d 346, 95 Cal.App.2d 82, rehearing denied 213 P.2d 788, 95 Cal.App.2d 82.

93. Mass.—Warsofsky v. Sherman, 93 N.E.2d 612, 326 Mass. 290—Cann

In determining whether a relationship is confidential within the general rule as to constructive trusts, the origin of the confidence and the source of the influence growing out of that confidence ordinarily are immaterial,⁹⁴ and the fiduciary or confidential relationship on which a constructive trust may be founded is not limited to conventional trusteeships and other recognized legal relations of trust and confidence.⁹⁵ In other words, confidential relations are not confined to any specific association of parties,⁹⁶ but apply generally to all persons who are associated by any relation of trust and confidence,⁹⁷ or to all persons who occupy a position out of which the duty of good faith should in equity and good conscience arise;⁹⁸ and the relation exists wherever in fact one has the confidence of, and influence over, another.⁹⁹

The relation between parties, in order to be a "fiduciary relation," need not be legal, but may be moral, social, domestic, or merely personal;¹ and

Tenants in common

While there is no fiduciary relationship between tenants in common, if one cotenant comes into possession of funds belonging to his cotenant, he becomes trustee of such funds and stands in fiduciary relationship to his cotenant with respect thereto—Carter Oil Co. v. Crude Oil Co., C.A.Okl., 201 F.2d 547.

Personal association not essential

A confidential relation is not restricted to any personal association, and it may exist as matter of law in certain recognized fiduciary relation, as in case of trustee and cestui que trust, attorney and client, and guardian and ward, and it may also exist as matter of fact wherever one person has reposed a special confidence in another to the extent that the parties do not deal with each other on equal terms, either because of an overmastering dominance on the one side, or weakness, dependence or justifiable trust, on the other—Ringer v. Finrock, 17 A.2d 348, 340 Pa. 455.

Affinity or consanguinity

The amount of evidence necessary to establish a confidential relationship ordinarily rests with the trier of facts, and it is not essential to show a relationship by affinity or consanguinity, or that business transaction established a particular relationship between the parties, but if parties are friends, and grantor reposes confidence in grantee, and grantor is of advanced age, an implied trust may result—Kent v. First Trust & Sav. Bank of Pasadena, 225 P.2d 625, 101 Cal.App.2d 361.

 98. Miss.—Risk v. Risher, 19 So.2d 484, 197 Miss. 155.

Advisor or counselor

A confidential relationship is not limited to any particular association of parties, but exists wherever one occupies toward another such a position of advisor or counselor as reasonably to inspire confidence that he will act in good faith for the other's interest—Dob v. Jaffe, 41 A.2d 407, 351 Pa. 297.

Family or other relationship

A constructive trust is imposed even though there is no fiduciary relation such as that between attorney and client, principal and agent, and trustee and beneficiary, and it is sufficient that there is a family relationship or other personal relationship of such a character that transferor is justified in believing that transferee will act in transferor's interest—Powell v. Powell, 126 N.Y.S.2d 182, 205 Misc. 14.

Elements

A confidential relation involves elements of secrecy and of trust and confidence; a relation of parties in which one is bound to act for benefit of other and can take no advantage to himself from his acts relating to other's interest, and includes such relationships as those of trustee and cestui que trust, principal and agent, and employer and employee—Shell Petroleum Corp. v. Pratt, D.C.Kan., 22 F.Supp. 304, affirmed, C.C.A., Pratt v. Shell Petroleum Corporation, 100 F.2d 833, certiorari denied 69 S.Ct. 775, 306 U.S. 659, 83 L.Ed. 1056.

Influence implied

A fiduciary relationship exists when influence is implied, as between parties, in very conception of relation, wherein position of one of them is superior to that of the other, and does not involve intentional concealment or misrepresentation—Winger v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 67 N.E.2d 265, 394 Ill. 94.

where by reason of kinship, business association, disparity in age or physical or mental condition, or other reason, the grantee is in an especially intimate position with regard to another and the latter reposes a high degree of trust and confidence in the former, a confidential relationship exists which prohibits the one trusted from seeking a selfish benefit for himself during the course of the relationship, and affords a basis for imposing a constructive trust.² On the other hand, confidential relations, within the meaning of the rule as to constructive trusts, do not necessarily exist between two persons who for certain purposes are trustee and cestui que trust,³ or between persons who have negotiated a trust agreement which is abandoned or canceled before it becomes effective.⁴

Ordinarily, in order to establish a confidential relation, there must be not only confidence of the one person in the other, but also on the part of the former some inequality, dependence, weakness, want of knowledge, or other conditions giving to the latter some advantage over the former.⁵ The mere existence of mutual respect and confidence does not make a business relationship fiduciary,⁶ and a mere habit or practice on the part of one person of relying on another for advice does not establish a confidential relation between them.⁷ Also, the mere fact that two persons are friends does not establish a confidential relation,⁸ but in some circumstances friendship may be sufficient to show a fiduciary relationship for the purpose of establishing a trust.⁹ It is not sufficient that confidence be reposed by one party without actual acceptance by the other party.¹⁰ No person can obtrude his trust or his secrets on

Factors for consideration

In determining whether a fiduciary or confidential relationship exists factors to be taken into consideration are degree of kinship, if any, disparity in age, health and mental condition, and relative education and business experience of parties, and the like—Stephenson v. Kulchek, 101 NE 2d 642, 410 Ill. 139—Kester v. Crilly, 91 NE 2d 419, 405 Ill. 425.

Special trust and confidence

Where there is no proof of an actual confidential relationship between grantor and grantee of realty to serve as basis on which equity will raise a constructive trust if the relationship was abused by grantee, and law looks only to a presumption of fraud arising out of relationship between grantor and grantee, relationship must be one where there is ordinarily a special trust and confidence and likelihood of exercise of personal influence and control such that one would expect of the other fair dealing and mutual consideration—Worobey v. Sibich, 71 A.2d 80, 136 Conn. 352.

Preexisting relationship

The relationship necessary to the establishment of a constructive trust must be a preexisting relationship of confidence such as that existing between husband and wife, father and son, principal and agent, attorney and client, or the implied obligation of a trustee—*Halper v. Closeness of friendship

The fact that plaintiff's wife and defendant had been close friends since girlhood, had corresponded, visited back and forth, and plaintiff's wife considered defendant the most reliable friend she had and had confidence in defendant did not establish a confidential or fiduciary relationship so as to warrant a conclusion that defendant was constructive trustee of her interest in a joint tenancy deed executed by plaintiff's wife to plaintiff and defendant after defendant promised to provide for plaintiff under certain circumstances—*Ampuero v. Degree of intimacy

While the degree of intimacy requisite to establishment of a constructive trust is found as a general rule only where the parties are related by affinity, consanguinity, or contract, if may exist where the bond between them is merely one of friendship—Coombs v. Minor, 141 P.2d 491, 60 Cal.App.2d 645.

Advisory business relationship

If parties be friends and grantor reposes confidence in grantee, especially if in addition there exist an advisory business relationship and the one reposing confidence be of advanced age, an implied trust may result—Adams v. Bloom, 142 P.2d 775, 61 Cal.App.2d 315.

Fraternal relation

When two members of same fraternal order deal with each other and one accepts as true the other's representations, into which but for fraternal relation he would have made inquiry, law will protect him in his trust—Lucas v. Asociacion Protectora Uniao Madeirense Do Estado Da California, 143 P.2d 53, 61 Cal. App.2d 344.

(2) Where mineral leases which had been terminated as to mining partnership by reason of failure of partnership to pay delay rentals were reacquired by one member of partnership after interest of other member had been sold to plaintiff, constructive trust on such lease interest could not be impressed in favor of plaintiff on theory that loss to partnership of leases had been result of breach of fiduciary duty by other partner, since constructive trust will not be impressed in favor of one partner when property involved was never at any time held by them jointly or as partnership assets.—*Gilroy v. (2) Where grandmother, who was guardian de facto of her grandchildren and had assumed management and control of their property, purchased at tax sale property formerly in grandchildren's estate, she would be decreed to hold land as trustee under constructive trust for benefit of her grandchildren.—Maish v. Valenzuela, 229 P.2d 248, 71 Ariz. 426, 25 A.L.R.2d 747.

(3) Where probate court on petition of guardian of minor ward ordered sale of land purchased with ward's funds by former guardian who took title to land in his own name, purchaser of land at sale was entitled to assert existence of constructive trust in land in favor of ward as against claims to land made by heirs of former guardian.—Nelson v. Wood, 137 S.W.2d 929, 199 Ark. 1019.

Retention of possession

Although relationship of guardian and ward ceases when ward becomes of age, if guardian then has possession of property of his ward and continues in possession without accounting or payment, there results at least a constructive trust which continues as long as guardian continues to hold such possession of property.—In re Walls' Guardianship, 38 N.Y.S.2d 879, 179 Misc. 924.

(2) Where sale of realty was made for administrator, pursuant to administration of estate, and on administrator's petition, equity would not permit administrator to acquire title to land free from trust imposed on him for benefit of heirs and creditors of the estate, even though sale to administrator was actually made by commissioner appointed by court.—Davis v. Jenkins, 72 S.E.2d 673, 236 N.C. 283, rehearing denied and opinion supplemented 73 S.E.2d 780, 236 N.C. 767.

(3) An administrator's failure to give decedent's heirs notice of administrator's sale, at which he expects to purchase personal property of estate, and his purchase thereof for much less than its real and appraised value without competitive bidding, furnished decisive evidence of fraud entitling heirs to impress trust on title to such property for their benefit.—Meade v. Vande Voorde, 299 N.W. 175, 139 Neb. 827, 137 A.L.R. 554.

(4) Fact that deceased executrix, who had been given life estate under will with power to sell, convey, or expend and who had procured distribution of entire estate to herself, could have, under terms of will, consumed entire estate could not affect establishment of trust in assets of testator's estate not consumed by executrix in action by remainderman.—Cardozo v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 254 P.2d 949, 116 Cal.App.2d 833.

(5) The fact that encumbered estate property surrendered by administrator to lienholder was not subsequently purchased by administrator, but was sold by lienholder to a corporation, did not vitiate the establishment of a constructive trust in favor of the heirs, where administrator was at all times general manager of the corporation and held a majority of its stock.—Ryan v. Plath, 140 P.2d 968, 18 Wash.2d 839.

Trust not automatically raised Estate property purchased by administrator, directly or indirectly, is not automatically impressed with a constructive trust in favor of beneficiaries of estate.—McCabe v. Cambiano, Tex.Civ.App., 212 S.W.2d 237.

Statute prohibiting purchase

Under statute providing that no administrator shall become purchaser of estate property, either directly or indirectly, and that such sale shall be declared void and administrator shall hold property in trust for estate, proof required is merely to show that title to property which had been sold by the administrator came into the administrator while he was acting as such.—Wadsworth v. Cole, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W.2d 628.

Option

Where administrator, in course of collecting assets of estate, is required to sell land of third persons under a judgment or other process to enforce payment of debts due estate, and administrator bids in land so sold, it is optional with heirs to permit him to hold land for his individual benefit or to require him to account to estate for its value.—Thompson v. Fraley, 130 S.W.2d 793, 279 Ky. 233.

18. U.S.—Continental Cas. Co. v. Powell, C.C.A.Va., 83 F.2d 652.

as security for a debt or obligation.¹⁹ The mere fact that the same persons are stockholders and officers of two corporations does not give rise to a confidential relation between such corporations.²⁰

Various other relationships have been held to be²¹ and not to be²² confidential or fiduciary so as to warrant the impressment of a constructive trust.

Inclination of courts

On the question of constructive trust, courts are inclined to deny existence of a confidential relationship in cases of mortgagor and mortgagee, pledgor and pledgee, applicant for a loan, etc.—Carpenter & Carpenter v. Collecting agent

As between a vendor and purchaser there is no fiduciary relation, but where the purchaser agrees to act as collecting agent for the vendor in collecting rents and applying them on purchase price, a fiduciary relation arises, and equity will raise a constructive trust.—Allen v. Particular relationships

(1) A confidential relation does not exist as a matter of law between a real estate agent and a client.—In re Morris's Estate, 40 A.2d 907, 156 Pa. Super. 394.

(2) An oil company which held oil and gas lease under which it was required to pay royalties stood in no trust relationship to lessor or to successor in interest of assignee of lessor as regarded such royalty payments.—Carter Oil Co. v. Crude Oil Co., C.A. Okl., 201 P.2d 547.

(3) Trust relationship, with its fiduciary obligations, is not imposed by operation of law on any legal life tenant in favor of remainderman as beneficiary.—Cooke v. U. S., D.C. Hawaii, 115 F.Supp. 830, motion denied, C.A., U. S. v. Cooke, 215 F.2d 528.

(4) Where a loan company had contemplated the purchase of realty prior to time that plaintiff informed company of his intention to purchase the property and made application for loan thereon, which application was rejected, and the property subsequently acquired by the company, no such confidential relationship existed between plaintiff and company which would give rise to the creation of a constructive trust.—Halper v. Homestead Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 59 N.Y.S.2d 688, affirmed 59 N.Y.S.2d 695, 269 App. Div. 1044.

(5) Where joint tenants did not finally consummate their contract whereby one of them was to prosecute suit in his name to cancel trustee's deed of their land and convey undivided half of land recovered to his co-tenant, so that no fiduciary relation arose between them, such co-tenant's subsequent purchase of land from purchaser at trustee's sale created no constructive trust obligating him to account to other tenant for interest in land and award him undivided half interest therein.—Corn v. First Texas Joint Stock Land Bank of Houston, Tex. Civ. App., 131 S.W.2d 762, error refused.

(6) Purchasers in possession of lands under land contract, who bought the lands from the state which acquired title for nonpayment of taxes which vendor represented had been paid, did not hold lands in trust for vendor on theory of existence of confidential relation.—Ellison v. Hewitt, 9 N.W.2d 573, 305 Mich. 349.

(7) Application to lender for loan created no fiduciary relationship simply because applicant was led to believe loan would be made to him of amount sufficient to pay a certain sum which vendor had agreed to accept in payment of balance on land contract, so as to warrant declaration of constructive trust where proposed lender bought land contract

(2) Family Relationships

Family relationship ordinarily, but not always, is sufficient to impose fiduciary obligations warranting the raising of a constructive trust in case of abuse or violation of the confidential relation.

Persons in family relationships,²³ such as those of husband and wife,²⁴ or those of parent and child,²⁵ ordinarily are to be regarded as in a confidential relationship within the meaning of the rule that a constructive trust arises from the abuse or violation of such a relation, and particular transactions between husband and wife,²⁶ and parent and from vendor—Smith v. Harwell, 136 S.W.2d 172, 199 Ark. 757.

23. S.C.—Ali v. Prillman, 20 S.E.2d 741, 200 S.C. 279, 159 A.L.R. 981

Close kinship

Where confidence was induced by close kinship, its abuse will support a constructive trust—Moses v. Moses, 53 A.2d 805, 140 N.J.Eq. 575, 173 A.L.R. 273.

Oral trust concerning land

The confidential relation, which is necessary for imposition of constructive trust on transferee who refuses to perform an oral trust or agreement concerning land, may exist where, because of family relationship transferor is in fact accustomed to be guided by judgment or advice of transferee or is justified in placing confidence in belief that transferee will act in interest of transferor—Basman v. Frank, Mo., 250 S.W.2d 589.

Absence of fraud

Fact that deed from wife to husband was not obtained by fraud was not controlling in determining whether a constructive trust arose, in view of confidential relations existing between the parties—Dawson v. McNaney, 223 P.2d 907, 71 Ariz. 79.

Conduct in procuring deed

Grantor's active conduct in procuring deed may be important element in determining existence of fraudulent intent warranting declaration of constructive trust for another, particularly when transaction is between husband and wife—Greenly v. Greenly, 49 A.2d 126, 29 Del.Ch. 297.

A betrothal of marriage assumed between parties created as between them a relation of trust and confidence exacting utmost good faith in their dealings with each other—Hendley v. Darring, 31 So.2d 317, 249 Ala. 381.

Divorced persons

Confidential relations may exist between divorced persons with respect to matters relating to the maintenance of, and provision for, their minor children—Barker v. Barker, 27 N.W.2d 576, 75 N.D. 253, 171 A.L.R. 447.

To whom conveyance made

Where conveyance is from child to parent, it will ordinarily be presumed that a confidential relation exists, but, where conveyance is from parent to child, question is one of fact to be proved, except where parent relies heavily on child for care and protection or for guidance in business affairs and child becomes dominant party—Grimes v. Grimes, 40 A.2d 58, 184 Md. 59.

Equity will scrutinize closely a conveyance without consideration, other than love and affection, from an elderly parent physically handicapped and with little education and business experience to one of her large family of children, there appearing no reason for discrimination between the children—Ismalia Haa-haa Akiona Hee v. Circumstances giving rise to constructive trust

(1) Where husband had purchased property under contract for deed and subsequently assigned contract for deed to his wife but procured a deed from vendor to himself, husband became trustee of a constructive trust—Omwake v. Omwake, Fla., 70 So.2d 565

(2) Where name of wife as grantee was inserted in the deed by agent of husband purchaser on insistence by wife, without consent and contrary to intention of husband who was purchaser of property and who paid the purchase price, wife held property as a constructive trustee for her husband—McConnell v. Dixon, 233 P.2d 877, 68 Wyo. 301.

(3) Where husband purchased property in wife's name and wife recognized husband's ownership and husband exercised complete domain over property, husband was entitled to impress property with a constructive trust as against claims of wife's heir—Hartkopf v. Hesse, 49 N.Y.S.2d 162.

Separate property

(1) Whenever the husband acquires the separate property of his wife as his own, with or without her consent, he holds it in trust for her benefit, in the absence of any direct evidence that she intended to make a gift of it to him—Allen v. Allen, 31 S.E.2d 453, 198 Ga. 269.

(2) Under the statute providing that personality of wife which husband purports to reduce to his possession may not become his property except with wife's written assent, child,²⁷ have, accordingly, been held to give rise to a constructive trust. Likewise, a confidential or fiduciary relation may exist between brothers, sisters, or brothers and sisters,²⁸ so as to raise a constructive trust with respect to transactions between them,²⁹ and other diverse family relationships have in particular circumstances been held confidential in nature so as to warrant the establishment of a constructive trust.³⁰

It has been held, however, that the mere fact of family relationship, kinship, or consanguinity, does not necessarily produce a confidential relationship, the abuse of which gives rise to a constructive trust,³¹ as in the case of parent and child,³² husband personality which the wife acquires during coverture remains her own, and even though the husband attempts to reduce to his possession, he acquires no title thereto but instead is constituted a trustee for his wife, unless he obtains the property with his wife's express written assent that he may have full authority to sell, encumber, or otherwise dispose of for his own use and benefit.—Hax v. O'Donnell, 117 S.W.2d 667, 234 Mo App. 636

Antenuptial contracts in regulation of the interest that husband and wife shall have in the property of the other then owned or subsequently to be acquired are favored, and will be enforced by imposing a trust on the property.—Newton v. Pickell, 269 P.2d 658, 201 Or. 225.

Blank deeds

Where blank deeds were completed and delivered to son by mother under implied authority from father for purpose of having son give certain mortgage but not to vest beneficial interest in son who paid no consideration, son was constructive trustee and father was entitled to conveyance, subject to the mortgage, on condition precedent that father reimburse son for expenditures which son made on the property believing in good faith that he was the legal owner.—*Bechtel v. Failure to deliver deed

Where sister sold realty to plaintiff and plaintiff's husband as tenants by the entirety who thereafter enjoyed possession for over twenty-four years in open, adverse possession under claim of title, and improved the property, but sister never delivered a deed confirming the conveyance and so remained title owner, constructive trust between parties in confidential relation with each other arose to prevent unjust enrichment of sister, and protection of plaintiffs' equities thereunder was not barred by statute of frauds.—Rogers v. Rogers, 22 N.Y.S.2d 659, 174 Misc. 841, motion denied 27 N.Y.S.2d 1008, affirmed 28 N.Y.S.2d 743, 262 App Div. 798.

Purchase from mortgagee

Where defendant agreed to prevent foreclosure sale of mortgaged homestead of his mentally deficient brother and brother's wife, and to pay off their debt, in consideration for conveyance of part of property involved, but defendant, capitalizing his confidential relationship and without knowledge of brother and brother's wife, made no effort to prevent foreclosure sale but purchased all of the property from mortgagee who bought in at foreclosure sale and defendant then conveyed property to his wife for a nominal consideration, that part of property to which defendant was not entitled under the agreement was impressed with a constructive trust.—*Martin v. Division of estate

Oral arrangements between deceased's daughter, granddaughter, and grandson to divide estate equally under mistaken belief that deceased died intestate was not a binding agreement on which constructive trust could be declared against daughter who was chief beneficiary under will later found and duly probated.—*Haack v. (3) Principal and Agent

(a) In general

(b) Agent to purchase or to sell

(a) In General

A confidential or fiduciary relationship ordinarily exists between principal and agent, within the meaning of the rule as to the raising of a constructive trust in the case of a breach of such relationship, so that where the agent deals with the subject matter of the agency on his own account or for his own benefit, he will be deemed a constructive trustee for his principal.

A confidential or fiduciary relationship ordinarily exists between principal and agent, within the meaning of the rule as to the raising of a constructive trust in the case of a breach of such relationship.³⁷

Fraud

In suit to impress constructive trust the relation of father and child is not of such confidential status as to create presumption of fraud as to conveyance by father to child.—Itapaport v. Kalstein, 24 So.2d 301, 156 Fla. 722.

Undue Influence

Influence through affection is not wrongful, and relationship of parent and child between grantor and grantee of realty creates no presumption of grantee's undue influence over grantor, as required to establish constructive trust in grantee.—Wenne-mann v. Fischer, 56 N.E.2d 656, 323 Ill.App. 617.

Who is dominant party

Although confidential relationship necessarily exists between husband and wife when they reside together under ordinary conditions of marriage, nevertheless it cannot be said as matter of law that husband is the dominant and wife the dependent party, but this is a question of fact, for purpose of establishing a constructive trust.—*Brod v. Dependent on facts

A fiduciary relationship does not arise merely from fact that parties are brother and sister but depends on all facts and conveyance from sister to brother is not assumed to be fraudulent merely on account of the kinship.—Clark v. Clark, 76 N.E.2d 446, 398 Ill. 592.

(3) If brother's representation to sister that it would be to her best interest, due to her financial difficulties, to convey certain realty to him did not constitute a false representation, brother could not have committed fraud, and, therefore, there would not be any basis for a constructive trust in favor of sister.—*De La Torre v. relationship as agent for another, and thereby gains something for himself which in equity and good conscience he should not be permitted to keep, equity will raise a constructive trust and compel him to turn it over to the person equitably entitled to it, or to otherwise execute the trust as the court may direct.³⁸ As otherwise expressed, an agent undertaking any business or the performance of any services for another is disabled in equity from dealing with the subject matter of the agency on his own account or for his own benefit, and if he does attempt so to deal in his own name he will be deemed a constructive trustee for his principal.³⁹ Such principle has been applied with respect to benefits acquired by the agent from contracts,⁴⁰

Money

(1) An agent holds money of his principal in trust and must be held strictly to liability of trustee as between himself and man for whom he acts.—In re Reiter's Estate, 18 N.E.2d 563, 298 Ill. App. 313.

A mere employee, not an agent with respect to matter under consideration, does not ordinarily occupy a position of trust toward his employer, but if employee in course of his employment acquires secret information relating to employer's business, he occupies a position of trust analogous in most respects to that of a fiduciary, and must govern his actions accordingly.—Brophy v. Cities Service Co., 70 A.2d 5, 31 Del. Ch. 241.

Stock

Where equal owners of all stock of corporation agreed that each should transfer a certain number of shares to an agent and to an attorney for one of the stockholders under agreement that in case of conflict the shares transferred should be voted equally for both stockholders, agent who received his shares of stock from stockholder who was not his principal did not hold such stock as trustee for his principal.—Gerard v. Cohair

Where cohair of decedent's estate, after taking possession thereof under agreement with other heirs to act as their agent in management of estate, procured another to administer estate for purpose of divesting title of other heirs and obtaining it himself, and thus obtained title, concealing his acts from other heirs, equity would decree such title to be void and cohair to hold as trustee for his coheirs.—Brown v. Use of information or knowledge

(1) If employee used information concerning employer's business acquired while in its employ while working for another company, contrary to terms of his employment, whatever profits employee made with latter company would equitably belong to employer, and hence, whatever sum was determined to be due employee by accounting, in action between employee and other company would, in equity, be held by him as trustee for his employer.—State ex rel. Duggan v. Kirkwood, 208 N.W.2d 257, 357 Mo. 325, 2 A.L.R.2d 216.

(2) Agent's knowledge belongs to principal for whom agent acts, and, if agent uses knowledge for his own benefit, he becomes trustee for principal.—Stephenson v. Golden, 272 N.W. 881, 279 Mich. 493, modified on other grounds on rehearing 276 N.W. 849, 279 Mich. 710.

(3) A constructive trust would be imposed on realty acquired by defendant as the result of information received when he was, for all practical purposes, an agent for plaintiff and under an obligation, by reason of his employment, to report such information, even though realty was of a type only occasionally purchased by plaintiff, and there was no showing that plaintiff would have purchased the realty had he known of it.—Whitten v. Wright, 289 N.W. 509, 206 Minn. 423.

Fraud not shown

Principal could not be held victim of fraud because of false representation of agent that sums paid to principal were his net distributive share of estate, in absence of showing that principal relied on representation, with respect to question of existence of constructive trust.—Ballard v. Drake's Estate, 5 N.E.2d 671, 103 Ind. App. 143, followed in Dale v. Drake's Estate, 5 N.E.2d 676, 103 Ind. App. 705 and 5 N.E.2d 675, 103 Ind. 142.

leases,⁴¹ recovery in a judicial action,⁴² and patents.⁴³

If an agent having charge of lands of his principal acquires a tax title thereto,⁴⁴ or purchases an outstanding or opposing title,⁴⁵ or acquires the property on foreclosure sale,⁴⁶ or, discovering a defect in the title of his principal, makes use of such information to acquire a valid legal title for himself,⁴⁷ he will be deemed to hold such title in trust for his principal; and an agent buying property under a judgment in favor of his principal becomes a trustee, if he purchases for less than his principal's claim.⁴⁸ Likewise, an agent for the collection of successive mortgages, who acquires a title under a foreclosure of one of the earlier of them, holds it as a constructive trustee for the later mortgagees.⁴⁹ An agent who purchases his principal's property at a sale made to effectuate payment of a claim or judgment which it is the agent's duty to pay out of funds in his hands acquires no title to the property as against his principal, for whom he will be deemed to hold as trustee.⁵⁰

In order to charge an agent as a constructive trustee, however, there must be a connection between the scope of his duties and the transaction in which the agent seeks to profit,⁵¹ and the private and personal activities of an agent are not limited by his fiduciary duty to his principal unless they have a direct relationship to the activities of his principal.⁵² So, the general agency of a person to manage the business affairs of another does not forbid the agent to buy property in his own name with his own funds.⁵³ Where one person has an interest in a property prior and in a measure adverse to the interest of another, and the other, with knowledge of the facts, places his interest in the hands of the one having the prior interest for protection, the ordinary rules governing trustees and cestuis que trust do not apply, the relationship being at most a subservient trust or agency, and while good faith must be exercised by the agent in the management of the property or business, good faith does not in such case require the relinquishment of the agent's interest, or of his priority.⁵⁴

No constructive trust may be impressed on the theory of breach of an agent's fiduciary relation where the relationship of principal and agent is not established,⁵⁵ or has terminated.⁵⁶ Where the al-

Expectancy

A tenant in possession has an equitable right to expect that his lease will be renewed on its expiration, and, although lessee may not compel landlord to renew the lease, equity will declare a constructive trust in a lease given to his fiduciary which deprives him of this expectancy.—Warner Bros. Theatres v. Cooper Foundation, 6 A.2d 189, 189 F.2d 825.

Oil and gas leases

An oil company's notice to its employees that any employee purchasing oil and gas leases or royalties would be immediately discharged, but not reciting that such discharge would be the only penalty invoked, did not waive or otherwise bar company's other remedies for improper acquisition of property by employees, including enforcement of constructive trust in property acquired.—Pratt v. Shell Petroleum Corp., C.C. A. Kan., 100 F.2d 833, certiorari denied, 59 S.Ct. 775, 306 U.S. 659, 83 L. Ed. 1056.

Refusal by landlord

Where, however, tenants of restaurant sent their manager to procure a lease, and landlord refused to lease to tenants, but did lease to manager on condition that manager take over restaurant and make repairs, and tenants made repairs specified, landlord was not estopped to deny tenants' right to lease, nor could tenants claim lease on theory that manager held lease as trustee for tenants.—McLeod v. Lampkin Hotel Co., 77 S.W.2d 927, 257 Ky. 269.

Master's deed

If one advancing money and taking title by master's deed was acting as owner's agent to redeem premises but instead took title in his own name, law would raise trust ex maleficio, and he would hold title as mortgagee.—McDonnell v. Holden, 185 N.E. 572, 352 Ill. 362.

Grantees of agent

Where agent in violation of agreement to redeem land for mortgagor caused title to be conveyed to agent's nominee so that a constructive trust arose in favor of the mortgagor, grantees of agent could defeat the trust only on proof that they were innocent purchasers for value.—Doner v. Phoenix Joint Stock Land Bank of Kansas City, 45 N.E.2d 20, 381 Ill. 106.

leged fiduciary relationship arises out of a pooling arrangement which is illegal under the anti-trust laws, plaintiff may not rely on such fiduciary relationship to impress a constructive trust on a lease acquired by defendant.⁵⁷

Fraudulently inducing conveyance for own benefit. Where an agent fraudulently induces his principal to convey land to another, really for the benefit of the agent, and without the knowledge of the principal, the effect is to create a trust in favor of the principal by operation of law.⁵⁸

Unauthorized use of principal's funds or property. Where an agent employs the money or property of his principal in the purchase of lands or other property, without the consent of the latter, taking the title in his own name or in the name of a third person, a trust of the legal estate will arise by operation of law;⁵⁹ and it is immaterial in such case whether the money of the principal was used at the time of, or subsequent to, the purchase.⁶⁰ It is essential, however, that the use of the principal's money for this purpose, or the taking of title by the agent in his own name or in the name of a third person, should be unauthorized or fraudulent;⁶¹ and so where, after the agent has purchased lands with the principal's money and has taken title in his own name or in the name of a third person, the principal ratifies and confirms such transaction, such ratification has the effect of a previous authorization for such purchase, and a constructive trust in such lands will not arise in favor of the principal, there being no want of authority on the part of the agent to make the purchase or fraudulent use of the principal's money.⁶² Where money is collected by an agent and deposited in a bank to his own account, such deposit is impressed with a trust in favor of his principal.⁶³ It has been held that if a general agent uses funds of his principal to buy realty in his own name, or for the improvement of the realty, the principal's recourse is to sue, not for the property itself, but for the amount of the money appropriated by the agent to his own use.⁶⁴

Corporate officers or employees. An officer or employee of a corporation ordinarily occupies a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the corporation with respect to business or property, within the general rules relating to constructive trusts,⁶⁵ and where such officer or employee by the use of knowledge obtained through the relationship, or by the betrayal of the confidence reposed in him, or some breach of duty imposed on him under it, acquires title to, or an interest in, property antagonistic to that of the corporation, he holds such title or interest subject to a constructive trust in the latter's favor,⁶⁶ regardless of actual injury to the

Lease

(1) Employee who obtained lease on employer's place of business after employee was discharged and on information which was neither secret nor confidential, and which was not obtained by reason of, or in course of, employment, did not hold lease in trust for benefit of employer—Cohn v. Clare, 44 P.2d 634, 6 Cal.App.2d 504.

(2) Where assignee for benefit of creditors of business conducted in rented premises discharged employee who had an option to purchase business, which option assignee was bound to recognize under terms of assignment, and assignee then repudiated option, any relationship of trust and confidence between employee and assignee terminated and employee was free to act in his own interest, so that employee's subsequent acquisition of lease to premises to protect his interest was not subject to a constructive trust in favor of assignee—Raymond v. Macfadden, 150 P.2d 829, 21 Wash.2d 328.

Prospecting permit

A consulting geologist who had been employed to develop oil lands acquired from claimants under placer mining laws was not precluded from acquiring a prospecting permit authorized by statute as to part of land,

Accounts receivable

the property,⁷¹ or where the officer purchased the corporation's property.⁷² So, where a business opportunity is in the line of a corporation's activities and is one in which the corporation has a legitimate interest or expectancy, the opportunity belongs to the corporation, and an officer or director who diverts the opportunity and embraces it as his own is

(2) Where contract allegedly made through the instrumentality of the president of the corporation between the corporation and holders of one-third of the corporation's stock to induce a sale of that stock to the president was never carried out by the corporation but was assumed by the president individually, the corporation was not harmed, and a constructive trust in favor of the corporation of a contract for the purchase of the stock purchased by the president for his own benefit would not be imposed—Manacher v. Central Coal Co., 63 N.Y.S.2d 463.

(3) The fact that director of corporation transferred one-half interest in oil lease to children of president of corporation after purchase of lease on failure of corporation to act on resolution authorizing purchase would not justify a finding that director and president planned to divert purchase of oil lease from corporation to make a private profit so as to justify imposition of constructive trust on oil lease in favor of corporation.—Deep Oil Development Co. v.

(4) If corporate director and manager did not violate his fiduciary duty in purchasing stock in competing corporation, but was liable in damages for breach of other fiduciary duties, a constructive trust would not arise concerning the competing corporation's stock which was still in his own hands or in that of his transferees—Wood v. Gordon, 246 P.2d 84, 112 Cal. App.2d 374

(5) Metal company's naked opportunity of putting money into what was termed a "mining wildcat" was not a corporate asset, so as to impose in favor of stockholders a constructive trust on officers and directors of metal company who did participate in such speculative venture which subsequently proved profitable—Turner v. Application of equitable standards

In suit by corporation against director to impress a constructive trust on an oil lease on theory that director purchased lease for himself after having been directed to purchase it for corporation, rights of parties would not be determined by strict letter of law, but integrity and fidelity, fair dealing, and good faith between parties, measured by equitable standards, would establish basis on which case would be decided—Deep Oil Development Co. v. Cox, Tex. Civ. App., 224 S.W.2d 312, refused no reversible error

69. N.Y.—Gildener v. Lynch, 54 N.Y. 82d 823.

Secret procurement

(1) Where officer and director of corporation who, as lessor knew, had been acting as agent for corporation, secretly obtained in his own name a succeeding lease on premises which corporation then occupied as lessee, he held such lease as constructive trustee for benefit of corporation, although corporation had agreed to pay him a commission for procuring a renewal of its lease and lessor would not have renewed corporation's lease.

—Washington Theatre Co. v. Marion Theatre Corp., 81 N.E.2d 688, 119 Ind. App. 114.

(2) A corporate lessee's directors' and officers' secret procurement of new lease of demised premises to another corporation, thereby threatening destruction of original lessee's business and remaining officers' and director's interest therein as holder of half of such lessee's stock, became trustees of new lease for benefit of original lessee—Gildener v. Use of own money

Where a corporate officer makes acquisitions on his own account which are essential or would be advantageous to corporation, such acquisitions, even though made with officer's own money, are subject to constructive trust for benefit of corporation—Weissman v. A. Weissman, Inc., 97 A.2d 870, 371 Pa. 470.

Ultra vires endeavor

Corporate directors, including savings and loan association directors, at election of corporation, are liable as constructive trustees with respect to venture in which assets were wrongfully used and its resulting profits, notwithstanding assets were misused and profits therefrom were realized in line of endeavor ultra vires to corporation.—Diedrick v. Helm, 14 N.W.2d 913, 217 Minn. 488, 153 A.L.R. 649

72. Ill.—Winger v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 67 N.E.2d 355, 394 Ill. 94.

Absence of fraud

It has been held however, that no constructive trust was created in favor of corporation when corporation deeded land to its president, in absence of showing of actual or constructive fraud by president or that corporation was not authorized to give away its assets—McLaughlin v. Corcoran, 69 P.2d 597, 104 Mont. 590.

chargeable as a constructive trustee for the benefit of the corporation with the profits and benefits received therefrom.⁷³

The test in determining whether a director or other corporate officer should be held as a trustee for the corporation, with respect to transactions undertaken in his individual name, is whether there was a specific duty on the part of the officer sought to be held liable, to act or contract with respect to the particular matter as the representative of the corporation only,⁷⁴ and the private and personal activities of an officer or director are not limited by his fiduciary duty to the corporation unless they have a direct relationship to the activities of the corporation.⁷⁵ A corporate officer who does not utilize his position, or the money, or property of the corporation in the acquisition of corporate stock may not be held liable therefor as a constructive trustee,⁷⁶ and a corporate officer borrowing money in good faith from the corporation in order to purchase certain property is not liable to the corporation as a constructive trustee.⁷⁷

(b) Agent to Purchase or to Sell

Where a person acquires the legal estate in property as the agent of another, or on trust and confidence that he will acquire it for the benefit of another, equity will imply a trust in favor of the latter; and an agent to sell may be held liable to his principal as a constructive trustee of the proceeds of the sale.

Where a person acquires the legal estate in property as the agent of another, or on trust and confidence that he will acquire it for the benefit of another, equity will imply a trust in favor of the latter.⁷⁸ Thus, where one employed to act as agent of another in the purchase of property takes title in himself, he will be considered in equity as holding the property in trust for his principal,⁷⁹ at least

Usefulness of property

The rule, permitting equity court to impress with constructive trust property which is product of appropriation of business opportunity by corporation director or officer, or by majority stockholder owing corporation some form of fiduciary duty, is not satisfied by proof that, after such appropriation, property would have been useful in corporation's business.—Blaustein v. Pan Am. Petroleum & Transport Co., 56 N.E.2d 705, 293 N.Y. 281, motion denied 57 N.E.2d 841, 293 N.Y. 763.

Purchase of securities

Where prior to sale of stock to syndicate corporation had transferred securities to person wholly controlling the corporation who had agreed to sell securities to directors, directors by retaining official positions after sale of stock did not sustain such fiduciary relationship as to vest corporation with equitable ownership of securities purchased by directors, on basis of a constructive trust.—In re Hightee Co., D.C. Nominal interest

Where corporation had only a nominal interest in building in which store was occupied by tenant whose securities were acquired by officers of corporation and had divested itself of all interest in the securities, no constructive trust arose in favor of corporation with respect to such securities.—Young v. Bradley, C.C.A. Ohio, 142 F.2d 658, certiorari denied Terminal & Shaker Heights Realty Co. v. Bradley, 65 S.Ct. 138, 333 U.S. 775, 89 L.Ed. 618, motion denied 85 S.Ct. 286.

Condition

Where one person undertakes as agent to purchase property for another, who is to pay part or all of the purchase price and become owner of all or a part of the property proportionate to his contribution, the purchase thereof by such person in his own name or otherwise for himself gives rise to a constructive trust for the benefit of the others in the agreed proportion, conditional on payment of agreed part of the purchase price.—Maddox v. Maddox, 38 N.W.2d 547, 151 Neb. 826.

Misrepresentation as to price

Where agent falsely advised the principal that realty which principal sought to purchase was not purchasable for a smaller sum and failed to inform principal that agent had received a written contract from vendor for sale of the realty to agent individually at reduced price, and agent retained the difference between pretended sales price and the amount he paid vendor, agent became a trustee for his principal.—Willis v. Van Woy, 20 So.2d 690, 155 Fla. 465.

Mortgage

Where person who acted as mortgagor's agent in securing a reduction of real estate mortgage himself purchased mortgage for reduced amount, a constructive trust resulted by operation of law, which prevented agent from enforcing mortgage against mortgagor for more than the amount which agent actually paid therefor with interest thereon from date of acquisition.—Faust v. ment of the trust, to reimbursement of his proper expenditures.⁸³ It has been held, however, that a constructive trust cannot be established merely on a broken promise to purchase, or to negotiate the purchase of, as agent, property for another, where there is no positive fraud perpetrated other than the breach of the promise.⁸⁴ A principal cannot hold

Leased property

Where plaintiff operators of filling station after obtaining leases to realty through broker, embarked on program of purchasing realty and engaged broker to make purchases, purchase of one parcel by broker for himself and wife during period of his employment after assuring plaintiffs he could obtain parcel for them, constituted a violation of broker's fiduciary duties to plaintiffs, and a constructive trust would be imposed on realty in plaintiffs' favor.—Mackey v. Baker, 41 N.W.2d 331, 327 Mich. 57.

In Massachusetts

(1) It has been held that where by conduct of parties, full relationship of principal and broker has come into existence including carrying on of negotiations between seller and buyer there comes into existence with it, a confidential and fiduciary relationship giving rise to a constructive trust in favor of the principal in property which the broker has acquired for himself in violation of his duty to the principal.—Benson v. Nirenstein, 93 N.E.2d 610, 326 Mass. 285, 20 A.L.R.2d 1136.

(2) In an earlier case, it was held that a mere engagement of a party to buy property for another, without more, does not create a fiduciary relationship for breach of which a constructive trust would arise, so that if plaintiffs employed defendant to buy certain machinery in their behalf and he bought it for himself instead with his own money, no constructive trust in the machinery would have arisen in favor of plaintiffs.—Salter v. Beal, 71 N.E.2d 872, 321 Mass. 105.

Payment not required

Where bill alleged that plaintiff's agent engaged defendant to acquire title to realty for plaintiff and that plaintiff offered and stood ready and willing to do and perform whatever to court seemed equitable, it was not necessary that any money be paid by plaintiff or his agent in order to hold defendant, who acquired title in his own name, as constructive trustee.—Stephenson v. Golden, 272 N.W. 881, 279 Mich. 493, modified on other grounds on rehearing 276 N.W. 849, 279 Mich. 710.

Financial inability

Where defendants obtained property for themselves in violation of previous promise to assist plaintiffs in acquiring property, decree establishing a constructive trust in favor of plaintiffs was proper notwithstanding alleged financial inability of plaintiffs to make the purchase, where decree made adequate provision with respect to payment of money.—Kuzlik v. Kwasny, 49 N.E.2d 212, 383 Ill. 354.

Where agent is given funds with which to purchase property, but he purchases property for himself with his own funds he becomes trustee of, and is deemed to hold title for, his principal just as if he had used funds entrusted to him by principal.—Kintert v. Wright, 185 P.2d 364, 81 Cal. App.2d 919.

Purchase at scavenger sale

Where friend agreed to purchase for plaintiff at scavenger sale a lot adjoining plaintiff's home, and instead purchased lot in his own name individually and refused to convey it to plaintiff except on payment of a substantial profit, plaintiff was entitled to conveyance of lot on payment of price paid at scavenger sale plus taxes and interest.—Evanoff v. his agent as constructive trustee if the agent, before purchasing property individually for himself, gave the principal an opportunity to purchase it, and the principal declined.⁸⁵

Agent to sell. A person who takes title to real estate under a parol agreement to sell it as an agent, and sells it and receives the money therefor, is liable to the grantor for the proceeds;⁸⁶ and one who, after land has been conveyed to him to be sold, mortgages it and receives the proceeds may be compelled to reconvey the land in the same condition as when it was conveyed to him.⁸⁷ An agent to sell, who in violation of his duty to his principal fails to disclose that he is also acting as agent for the purchaser,⁸⁸ or that the purchaser is his relative,⁸⁹ or that he, the agent, is retaining an interest in the property sold,⁹⁰ may be held liable to the vendor as a constructive trustee, and the fact that in a given case the owner of property may have received a fair price for the conveyance procured by his agent in violation of the fiduciary duty owed to the owner does not preclude application of the rule creating the constructive trust.⁹¹

d. Confidential Relationship as Extending to Third Person

A confidential relationship existing between two persons ordinarily does not extend to a third person, dealing with one of them, and as to whom the latter occupies a different relationship.

A confidential relationship existing between two persons ordinarily does not extend to a third person, dealing with one of them, and as to whom the latter occupies a different relationship, so as to form the basis of a constructive trust between such third person and the other fiduciary;⁹² but the duties and disabilities imposed by the relationship on the person in whom the confidence is reposed extend to his agents or subagents, clerks, assistants, and employees,⁹³ to his attorney,⁹⁴ and to his partner in business.⁹⁵

§ 152. — Wrongful or Unauthorized Possession or Control of Property

Where a person wrongfully, or without right, takes possession or assumes control of property, or receives its rents and profits, a constructive trust ordinarily arises in favor of the persons entitled thereto, but in order that one may be held as constructive trustee of money or funds coming into his possession or under his control, there must be some element of wrong or violation of duty.

Where a person wrongfully, or without right, takes possession or assumes control of property, or receives its rents and profits, a constructive trust ordinarily arises in favor of the person entitled

Release of interest

Where defendant acting on behalf of plaintiff acquired undivided three-fourths interest in realty but was unable to acquire outstanding interest, plaintiffs by memorandum of settlement acknowledging return of money paid on purchase price and releasing defendant from all agreements and responsibility with respect to the matter released their interest in the realty and in absence of showing that release was obtained through fraud, plaintiffs could not thereafter assert equitable ownership of undivided three-fourths interest in the realty held by defendant.—Verdan v. Rossi, Tex. Civ. App., 196 S.W.2d 111, error refused no reversible error.

Creator of corporation

The fact that charitable corporation knew of fiduciary relationship of its creator, who managed its properties through theater company, did not warrant imposing constructive trust against theater leased property acquired by the corporation, where lease was acquired by another employee of the charitable corporation without use of confidential information.—Warner Bros. Theatres v. Cooper Foundation, C.A.Okl., 189 F.2d 825.

Relatives

Where director of mining corporation acquired claims necessary to development of the company's project, and hence held such claims in trust for the company, such director's son and nephew did not hold their undivided interest in director's claim in trust for the company, in absence of showing that they stood in fiduciary relationship to the company or conspired with director to injure the

Assumption of trustee's duties

(1) A person who assumes the duties of a trustee as to certain property and proceeds with the administration of such property as is liable for improper conduct with respect to such property as though he had been regularly appointed.—Elliott v. Mosgrove, 91 P.2d 852, 162 Or. 507, rehearing denied 93 P.2d 1070, 162 Or. 507.

(2) Where trustees of trust estate, who were also managing officers and directors of corporation, wrongfully transferred trust assets to the corporation, corporation became a constructive trustee or trustee ex maleficio of all the trust property, and was restricted in its dealings with the property to such duties as the law imposed on it as such trustee.—Petroleum Royalties Co. of Oklahoma v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., C.C.A. Okl., 106 F.2d 440, 124 A.L.R. 1403, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 384, 308 U.S. 626, 84 L.Ed. 522.

(3) Whenever one comes into possession and control of property of another or in which another has an interest, he becomes with reference to that interest a trustee and is charged by law as well as by good morals to exercise such control with due respect to the interests of the beneficiary, and sometimes the trust is implied by law, but oftener the relationship arises out of contract between the parties and the possession and control gives the trustee such opportunities for oppression and wrong in the management of the property as calls for the closest scrutiny of his acts and out of this arises one of the most important branches of equity jurisdiction.—Pounds v. Jenkins, Tex. Civ.App., 157 S.W.2d 173.

Collection of tax

(1) Under sales tax ordinance imposing tax on buyer but imposing duty on seller of collecting tax, the receipt of tax money by seller operates to create a constructive trust.—City of Philadelphia v. Heinel Motors, 16 A.2d 761, 142 Pa.Super. 493.

(2) Where mortgage foreclosure decree provided that due and payable taxes were to be paid out of proceeds of sale, and purchaser withheld enough of agreed purchase price to equal amount of taxes which were a lien on land, constructive trust was created for the benefit of the city as to taxes which were a lien.—Grier v. City Council of City of Spartanburg, 26 S.E.2d 690, 203 S.C. 203.

Exclusion of partner

When certain of partners wrongfully exclude another from its business and take unto themselves the assets of partnership, they become, as to excluded partner, trustees ex maleficio.—Schroer v. Schroer, Mo., 248 S.W.2d 617.—Schneider v. Schneider, 146 S.W.2d 584, 347 Mo. 102.

Property of decedent

(1) Where one unlawfully comes into possession of property of a decedent, the constructive trust is one imposed by law.—Bennett v. Forrest, 150 P.2d 416, 24 Cal.2d 485.

(2) Constructive trust is imposed on funds wrongfully collected by third person under insurance policy payable to estate of decedent.—Green v. Levitsky, 185 A. 384, 120 N.J.Eq. 364.

(3) Son of store owner, to whom operation of business was intrusted as father's health failed, occupied relationship of trust to father, so that, having claimed business as his own after father's death, he would be accountable as a trustee for all property of father's estate in his possession.—Jubenville v. Jubenville, 46 N.E.2d 533, 313 Mass. 103, 144 A.L.R. 1008.

Privy of contract not essential

A materialman's complaint alleging that contractor had assigned to defendant amount due from city on order to furnish labor and materials to construct a public improvement, and seeking to recover money in defendant's hands as a constructive trustee, was not dismissible on ground that there was no privity of contract between the parties, since privity of contract is not essential where a defendant's obligation arises out of a constructive trust.—York Trim Corp. v. Ardscly Trading Corp., 7 N.Y.S.2d 843, 169 Misc. 656.

Extension of period

Where trustee named in deed of trust covering oil properties consented to deposit a part of purchase price with bank as security for payment of vendor's obligations and residue of deposit was returned to trustee at end of ninety days, any subsequent extension of period by trustee was a matter of grace and not of right, with respect to right to have fund impressed with trust.—Baltimore Trust Co. v. Intercean Oil Co., D.C. Md., 26 F.Supp. 817, affirmed, C.C.A., British-American Oil Producing Co. v. Baltimore Trust Co., 105 F.2d 291.

Absence of consideration

One who takes trust property without consideration and either with or without notice becomes a trustee himself.—Herman v. Edington, Mass., 118 N.E.2d 865.

knowledge of a prior or superior claim or title,⁹⁹ or where an intrusion is made on lands of an infant.¹ So the transferee of a constructive trustee who takes with notice that property has been delivered in breach of trust has no greater rights than the constructive trustee and likewise becomes a constructive trustee liable to reconvey the property.² Similarly, where a life owner of property, or a life beneficiary of a trust, comes into possession of the property, he will be deemed to have received it for trust purposes, and for the ultimate benefit of the remainderman;³ and where there has been a breach of a contract to make a devise or bequest, the owner of the legal title to property of the decedent may be decreed to be a constructive trustee of as much thereof as is necessary to satisfy the contract.⁴

In order, however, that one may be held as a constructive trustee of money or funds coming into his possession or under his control, there must be some element of wrong or violation of duty.⁵ So an assumption of possession under an adverse, although defective, title, without fraud, does not give rise to a constructive trust in favor of the true owner,⁶ nor does the assumption of possession and control of a decedent's estate by the surviving spouse, with the consent of the executors, although the possession is without right;⁷ and, in general, where the possession or assumption of control is without fraud, no constructive trust arises therefrom.⁸ Where property is transferred to a person under such circumstances that he is under a duty to make restitution and the right of restitution becomes barred because of running of the limitation period, the transferee ceases to hold the property under a constructive trust.⁹ On the other hand, the duty and liability as trustee for the owner of one who without right to property or funds, acquires possession thereof is not affected by the fact that he collected such property or funds under an agreement to be paid a commission for so doing and that such agreement is unenforceable.¹⁰

Necessity of notice

In order to constitute a person who takes trust property or trust money for his own purposes a constructive trustee thereof, he must have notice that it is being misapplied by being transferred to him, or, in other words, he must be party to a fraud or breach of trust on the part of the actual trustee.—Frier v. J. W. Sales Corp., 25 N.Y.S.2d 576, 261 App.Div. 388.

Trustee's executor or administrator

(1) Where there was nothing to show that any trust funds or property passed to trustee's executors except a sum which executors formally acknowledged, and with which they charged themselves and undertook to account, trustee's executors became the voluntary or constructive trustees of the trust funds.—McCallum v. Anderson, C.C.A.Okl., 147 F.2d 811.

(2) Where deceased testamentary trustee's son and executor treated trust as an obligation to which he had succeeded and exercised same duties for beneficiaries as though he were original trustee, at least as to extent of assets which he acquired from his father's estate, son became constructive successor trustee without necessity of appointment without exception to statute of frauds that a constructive trust need not be in writing.—Jones v. Katz, 59 N.E.2d 537, 235 Ill.App. 65.

§ 153. — Wrongful Disposition of Property

Generally, where one person disposes of property in fraud of the rights of another, a constructive trust attaches to the proceeds of the sale.

It is a general rule that, where one person disposes of property in fraud of the rights of another, a constructive trust attaches to the proceeds of the sale.¹¹ As otherwise expressed, a constructive trust arises whenever another's property has been wrongfully appropriated and converted into a different form.¹² So, where a person after selling property but before transferring the title, resells it to another, receiving the purchase price, he will be deemed a trustee for the first vendee of the proceeds of the resale.¹³ On the other hand, where there is no legal duty owing to another with respect to the disposition of certain property,¹⁴ or where the disposition made of property is not wrongful,¹⁵ no constructive trust arises. It has also been held that

Conveyance to nominee

Property of decedent's estate which was mortgaged to pay taxes and conveyed to attorney's nominee in administration proceedings instituted by attorney who claimed fees for services was subject to constructive trust in favor of heirs, with liability for charges covering costs of administration and protecting property from tax foreclosure, where attorney, before he caused sale to nominee, had knowledge that claim was without foundation.—Farrington v. Jacobs, C.C.A.Fla., 132 F.2d 745.

Legacy

Where one of several legatees, who were equally interested in a legacy as tenants in common, used the legacy in part payment for land purchased in his name, the other legatees could ratify his act in so disposing of the legacy and sue for a proportionate interest in the land purchased.—Lewis v. Patterson, 12 S.E.2d 593, 191 Ga. 348.

Transfer of bank account

The act of donor of bank deposit in causing fund to be transferred to his personal account to be used for his own purposes after donee's death constituted a misappropriation of fund and rendered him liable to estate of donee as a trustee ex maleficio.—First Nat. Bank of Portland v. Connolly, 138 P.2d 613, 172 Or. 434, rehearing denied 143 P.2d 243, 172 Or. 434.

Use restricted by agreement

Where the owner of personality turns possession thereof over to another whose use thereof is restricted by agreement, and who agrees not to sell the personality until after it has been paid for, an unauthorized sale by the person in possession creates a fiduciary relationship between the parties with respect to the consideration received from the sale of the personality.—General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Thompson, 292 N.W. 85, 70 N.D. 99.

Disposition by will

(1) Where husband and wife each contributed to the acquisition and construction of a hotel property which was in the name of wife and she attempted to dispose thereof by will creating a trust, constructive trust would be declared in the property in the proportion that husband and wife contributed their separate funds thereto with an equitable lien declared on the beneficial interest of any beneficiary in the trust who had drawn sums from the trust estate in excess of the proportion to which the beneficiary would have been entitled.—Dong v. Riley, C.A.Fla., 176 F.2d 449.

(2) Where husband and wife executed joint will constituting contract for disposition of their property and wife survived husband and made second will containing certain departures from joint will, on death of wife beneficiaries under joint will were entitled to have trust impressed on estate of wife and to have estate distributed in accordance with joint will.—*Sellvet v. Conversion or transfer

Whenever one person wrongfully takes the property of another and converts it into a new form or transfers it, a constructive trust arises and follows the property or its proceeds.—Wolfe v. Wolfe, 56 S.E.2d 343, 215 S.C. 530.

Money loaned for construction

One who lends money to an owner for construction of a house owes no legal duty to the materialman, not based on contract or estoppel, although he knows that the money is to be used to pay for materials and labor, to see that it is so used; and a materialman has an equitable claim in a fund in hands of owner or lender, payable to contractor in installments as construction progresses, only when there is a stipulation between owner or lender and contractor that installments shall not be paid until proof is furnished to owner that contractor has paid bills for materials, and materialman is so informed and relies and acts on assumption that such arrangement will be complied with, and owner contemplates that materialman will do so.—Security Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Underwood Coal & Supply Co., supra.

where a person who is without knowledge of facts which make him a converter, wrongfully disposes of another's property and acquires other property in exchange, the owner may enforce an equitable lien but not a constructive trust.¹⁶

Failure to make proper disposition or application. By analogy to the general rule with respect to a wrongful disposition of property, it is established that, where one secures possession of property or money on a promise or under a direction to make a certain disposition or application of it, and fails to do so, a constructive trust may be enforced against him.¹⁷

§ 154. — Conveyance, Bequest, or Devise Subject to Charge

Where property is conveyed inter vivos, or bequeathed or devised, subject to a charge, a constructive trust arises in favor of the person for whose benefit the charge is made.

Where property is conveyed inter vivos, or bequeathed or devised, subject to a charge for the payment of debts or other charge, a constructive trust arises in favor of the person for whose benefit the charge is made;¹⁸ and this is true even though the conveyance is absolute in form and the charge is created by parol.¹⁹

§ 155. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden of proof of a constructive trust is on the person seeking to establish it, while the burden of proving matter of affirmative defense is on the party against whom the trust is sought to be enforced.

In accordance with the general rules as to the burden of proof and presumptions in actions for the establishment or enforcement of trusts, discussed infra § 467, the burden of proof of a constructive trust is on the person seeking to establish it,²⁰ while

Sale by heirs

Where owner of lands entered into an agreement with plaintiff for mineral development at so much per acre, and after the owner's death his heirs in violation of agreement sold the lands without paying plaintiff his fee and used the proceeds of the sale to pay the creditors of the owner's estate, thereby securing the lands free from all incumbrance, such failure to so pay did not give plaintiff a right to impose a constructive trust on the lands—*Landrum v. Use of funds

Equity will create constructive trust on basis of use of funds after trustee has acquired title to property.—Tri-City Electric Service Co. v. Jarvis, 185 N.E. 138, 206 Ind. 5.

Improper investments

Where person makes false representations as to how loan will be used for purpose of borrowing money and invests it in other lands or mortgages on other lands, constructive trust is created—Sliger v. Sliger, 105 S.W.2d 117, 21 Tenn. App. 64—Walker v. Collins, 7 Tenn. App. 333.

Lien

Where person has lien on personal property which is sold with understanding between owner and person holding lien that proceeds of sale be applied toward payment of lien, equity will impress a trust on such proceeds.—Stegemann v. Bendixen, 260 N.W. 14, 219 Iowa 1190.

Promise not to convey

Where defendants, in return for paying off mortgage on land and supplying funds for improvements thereon, received oral promise by grantor not to convey remaining joint interest held by grantor so that co-defendant, who was a joint tenant with grantor, would become sole owner at grantor's death, and defendants were entitled to rely on grantor's promise, equity would intervene to impose a constructive trust for defendants' benefit after grantor attempted to convey land to his second wife, who did not part with consideration for deed, and whether second wife had knowledge of grantor's promise to defendants and of the supplying of funds by defendants was immaterial.—*Fellerito v. the burden of proving matter of affirmative defense is on the party against whom the trust is sought to be enforced.²¹ The intention of the parties may be inferred from the facts, the conduct of the parties, and the surrounding circumstances.²² As a general principle, fraud, out of which a trust ex maleficio arises, is not presumed,²³ and the burden of proving the existence of the fraud, actual or constructive, necessary to give rise to a constructive trust is on the person asserting the existence of such a trust.²⁴ If the trust is alleged to have arisen out of a promise or agreement as to the acquisition, holding, or disposition of property, plaintiff must show the making of such promise or agreement,²⁵ and a substantial breach thereof.²⁶

Where a confidential or fiduciary relationship does not exist as a matter of law,²⁷ the burden of proof of such relationship, and abuse thereof through undue influence or otherwise, rests on plaintiff.²⁸ If, however, the existence of an ante-

Officer of corporation

Corporation, in order to establish trust in property which had been acquired personally by one of its officers, was required to establish an interest, actual or in expectancy, in property in question, while officer was its representative.—Colorado & Utah Coal Co. v. Harris, 49 P.2d 429, 97 Colo 309.

Presumption of right

In suits to establish constructive trusts, a presumption of right exists in favor of the one in whom the legal title is lodged.—Metzger v. Metzger, 14 A.2d 285, 338 Pa. 564, 129 A.L.R. 683—Majors v. Conveyance to wife

In order to rebut the presumption that a conveyance of property by husband to wife is made as an absolute gift, it must appear that there was an obligation on the wife's part to hold the property in trust for the husband.—Moneta v. Hoinacki, 67 N.E.2d 204, 394 Ill. 47.

Transfer to children

Fact that decedent prior to his death transferred a substantial portion of his property to certain of his children by creation of trusts and by creation of joint interest in bonds and a bank account did not create a presumption of constructive fraud so as to require two of his daughters as executrices to account for such property as assets of the estate.—In re Kumen's Estate, 99 N.Y.S.2d 148.

Voluntary act

Where application for creation of joint savings bank account was admittedly signed by the decedent and the plaintiff seeking to establish a trust in funds withdrawn from such account and for an accounting failed to prove a confidential relationship, there was a presumption that the transaction was the decedent's voluntary act and since no evidence was offered to rebut such presumption, it would stand.—Snoder v. Lenhart, 69 A.2d 382, 363 Pa. 371.

Inference from repudiation of agreement

On proof of a transfer made in reliance on an oral agreement to hold in trust and on proof of the subsequent repudiation of the agreement, the trier of facts may infer that maker of promise had intention not to perform at time promise was made, which is actual fraud.—Jarkish v. circumstances connected with the transaction, the burden of affirmatively proving good faith, or the absence of undue influence, or of proving, the justice, equity, and fairness of the transaction assailed, is on the party denying the existence of a trust,³⁰ except where he was the one reposing the confidence,

Divorced persons

A confidential relationship between divorced wife and husband which would furnish basis for impressing trust on proceeds from sale of real property pursuant to alleged oral agreement would not be presumed from her sentimental friendship for her former mate, or from her confidence in his earning power, or from her belief in his promises, since divorce restored her to her former status of an unmarried woman.—O'Melia v. Adkins, 166 P.2d 298, 73 Cal.App.2d 143.

Relationship between sisters is not presumed to be confidential, but a confidential relationship between sisters may be shown to exist, blood relationship being important factor in determining existence of confidential relationship.—Johnson v. Clark, 61 P.2d 767, 7 Cal.2d 529.

Acquisition of leases

In action to impose constructive trust on new oil leases, which defendant had acquired for himself after expiration of old leases in which plaintiffs and defendant had interests, on ground that defendant owed fiduciary duty to plaintiffs in acquiring new leases for himself, burden of proof was on plaintiffs to show that defendant acted in bad faith in acquiring new leases for himself.—*Smith v. Ordinarily, anything given by parent to child inter vivos is presumed to be a gift because parent is usually the dominant party, but such rule is reversed where, by reason of circumstances, child is the dominant party, such as where parent relies heavily on child for care and protection, or for guidance in business affairs.—*Bass v. Where a conversion by defendant of funds or property to which plaintiff is entitled is alleged, the burden is on plaintiff to show such conversion,³³ and to prove the identity of the fund or property on which the trust is sought to be impressed with that into which the conversion was made.³⁴

§ 157. — Parol Evidence

Generally, a constructive trust may be proved or established by parol evidence.

In accordance with the rule that the statute of frauds does not apply to constructive trusts, discussed supra § 141, it is generally held that a constructive trust may be proved or established by parol evidence,³⁸ although there is some authority apparently to the contrary.³⁹ So, parol evidence is admissible, in a suit for the establishment or enforcement of such a trust, to prove facts and circumstances constituting fraud, actual or constructive, from which a constructive trust may arise,⁴⁰ as by showing the existence of a confidential relationship,⁴¹ or the making of a promise or agreement,⁴² the violation of which is the moving cause of the suit. It has been held, however, that such evidence must be received with great caution.⁴³ Under the general rule, discussed supra § 149, that the mere violation of a parol promise made by a grantee of land to the grantor thereof, to hold such land in trust or to reconvey it to the grantor or another, does not create a constructive trust in the absence of fraud or abuse of confidential relationships, evidence of such a parol agreement, unaccompanied by proof of fraud or confidential relationship, is inadmissible.⁴⁴

Effect of parol evidence rule. The admission of parol evidence for the sake of establishing a constructive trust under an absolute conveyance or devise, where fraud or a fiduciary relationship is present, is not precluded by the rule forbidding any attempt to vary the language of a written instrument by parol,⁴⁵ although parol evidence of declarations or intention is not admissible, under such rule, where the facts and circumstances would not, of themselves, be sufficient to raise a trust by construction of law.⁴⁶

Absolute deed

(1) Rule that a parol trust cannot be engrafted on an absolute deed has reference to a deed which is valid not only in form but in substance and not to a deed wholly without consideration, good or valuable, and where grantee fraudulently holds thereunder against rights of vendor.—Hancock v. Hancock, 54 S.E.2d 385, 205 Ga. 684.

(2) Parol evidence is admissible to establish a trust, even against a deed absolute on its face, if it would be a fraud to set up the form of the deed as conclusive.—Kren v. Rubin, 61 N.W.2d 9, 338 Mich. 288.

(3) It has been held, however, that where deed of trust was actually executed and delivered to bank, relationship of confidence and promise by bank that land would never be sold under deed of trust could not be shown by oral testimony for purpose of establishing a constructive trust.—Niemann v. Zarsky, Tex.Civ.App., 233 S.W.2d 930.

Bank accounts

Parol evidence that titles to specified bank accounts came to defendant subject to a trust in favor of plaintiff was not inadmissible as varying the terms of written agreement entered into with bank.—Jarkich v. Badagnacco, 170 P.2d 994, 75 Cal.App.2d 505.

§ 158. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Sufficiency of evidence in particular cases

a. In General

A high or extraordinary degree of proof is required in order to establish a constructive trust, and the evidence must be clear, definite, unequivocal, and satisfactory, or such as to lead to but one conclusion, or as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the existence of the trust.

It has been broadly held that a high or extraordinary degree of proof is required in order to establish a constructive trust,⁴⁷ and that a mere preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient,⁴⁸ although some decisions hold that a mere preponderance of proof is all that is necessary,⁴⁹ with the qualification that the proof, in order to preponderate, must be of an extraordinary persuasiveness.⁵⁰ So, it is generally the rule, that a constructive trust

Strict proof required

Md.—Masters v. Masters, 89 A.2d 576, 200 Md. 318.

Parol evidence

In order to engraft implied or constructive trust on legal title to real estate by parol evidence it requires high degree of proof.—Vielhr v. Malone, 63 N.W.2d 497, 158 Neb. 548.

Comparison with fraud

In order to establish a constructive trust, a higher degree of proof is necessary than is required to establish fraud.—Aronson v. Spitecaufsky, Mo., 260 S.W.2d 548—Tobin v. Wood, Mo., 159 S.W.2d 287.

Dispositions of money

Where city sought to hold mayor and an attorney liable as constructive trustees for amounts they received as result of settlement of claims against city which mayor allegedly corruptly authorized and claimed that mayor received certain sum of money, the city had burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the reasonably probable disposition of the money was payment thereof to the mayor, but the city was not bound to exclude all other possible dispositions of the money.—City of Boston v. Un corroborated testimony

Evidence of facts constituting a constructive trust must be explicit, unequivocal, and indisputable, particularly when the only person who could successfully have contradicted uncorroborated testimony is dead.—O'Melia v. Adkins, 166 P.2d 293, 73 Cal.App.2d 143.

Parol evidence

Text rule has been held applicable where it is sought to establish a constructive trust by parol evidence. U.S.—Jacoby v. Shell Oil Co., C.A. Ill., 196 F.2d 855—Shapiro v. Rubens, C.C.A.Ind., 166 F.2d 659—Oasis Oil Co. v. Bell Oil & Gas Co., D.C.Okl., 106 F.Supp. 954.

It follows that the party seeking to impose a constructive trust must furnish clear, convincing, and conclusive evidence of the existence of a confidential or fiduciary relationship, where such relationship does not exist as a matter of law,⁵⁷ that the fiduciary relationship was breached,⁵⁸ that there was actual or constructive fraud by defend-

Where undue influence and incompetency do not appear, and relationship between the parties is not one ordinarily known as confidential in law, evidence to establish a confidential relationship must be certain and cannot arise from suspicion or from infrequent or unrelated acts.—Kahan v. Greenfield, 67 A.2d 567, 165 Pa.Super. 148.

Process of elimination

Proof of fiduciary or confidential relationship may be made by process of elimination as well as by affirmative documentary evidence.—Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Chicago & Western Indiana R. Co., C.C.A. III., 131 F.2d 215.

ant,⁵⁹ or that he wrongfully acquired possession of the property as to which the trust is sought.⁶⁰

Positive and uncontradicted testimony of the existence of facts sufficient to give rise to a constructive trust need not necessarily be adopted as true by the trial judge, if he is not convinced thereby;⁶¹ and testimony given long after the transaction in question, and after the parties concerned are dead, although positive and not contradicted by other testimony, is to be regarded with serious misgivings.⁶² The party seeking to show such a trust need not introduce a larger body of evidence than may be introduced by the adverse party, nor is it required that the proof have the certainty of mathematical demonstration.⁶³ Where the person seeking to establish a constructive trust makes out a prima facie case, the adverse party must overcome it by a preponderance of the evidence.⁶⁴

As dependent on number of witnesses. The sufficiency of the proof offered to establish a constructive trust does not necessarily depend on the number of witnesses testifying to the facts relied on,⁶⁵

and if the testimony of one witness is clear and convincing, it may be sufficient.⁶⁶ The party seeking to establish the trust need not introduce a greater number of witnesses than may be introduced by the adverse party,⁶⁷ and a mere conflict in the testimony of witnesses does not render the evidence unclear or indecisive so as to preclude impressment of a constructive trust.⁶⁸ Where, however, the parties themselves are the only witnesses, and their testimony is in conflict, and there is no corroborative evidence of any kind, the evidence cannot be said to be so clear and satisfactory as to establish a trust.⁶⁹

b. Sufficiency of Evidence in Particular Cases

Evidence has been held sufficient or has been held insufficient to satisfy the degree of proof required to establish a constructive trust or particular elements thereof.

Applying the general rules, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, as to the high degree of proof required in order to establish a constructive trust, it has been held, in numerous particular cases, that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the im-

Wash.—Ockfen v. Ockfen, 213 P.2d 614, 35 Wash.2d 439.

Slight evidence

It has been held, however, that slight evidence will sustain a claim that a fiduciary has failed in performance of his obligations to his principal and justify imposition of a constructive trust.—Whitsell v. Porter, 217 S.W.2d 311, 309 Ky. 247.

Circumstances as a whole

In oil company's action against geologist formerly employed by it and his business associates to impress constructive trust on property acquired by them by purloining the oil company's confidential information and diverting it to their own gain, it was unnecessary that plaintiff establish every transaction with separate, independent, and isolated proof of influence and effect of geologist's information on that particular transaction viewed in vacuo, and it was enough that circumstances, taken as whole, constituted clear, convincing, and trustworthy proof as to each transaction.—Hunter v. Shell Oil Co., C.A.Tex., 198 F.2d 485.

Representations

Clear and convincing evidence of representations made by a grantee to hold property in trust for a grantor, and of the intention at the time not to fulfill the represented promise is necessary to create a constructive trust for the grantor.—Robinson v. Linfield College, D.C.Wash., 42 F.Supp. 147, affirmed, C.C.A., 136 F.2d 805, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 262, 320 U.S. 795, 88 L.Ed. 479.

Self-defense

In suit against decedent's widow to impress constructive trust for decedent's heirs and next of kin on realty owned by decedent and defendant as tenants by entirety until defendant shot and killed decedent, burden was on defendant to establish by preponderance of evidence that she shot decedent in self-defense, as claimed by her.—Colton v. Wade, Del.Ch., 95 A. 2d 840.

Proof beyond question

Under complaint to impress trust on land purchased by broker at instance of complainant, broker who asserted an interest in the realty other than that of broker was required to prove such interest beyond question, to show good faith and that his interest was well-known to complainant at the time of employment.—Gabel v. Kilgore, 26 So.2d 166, 157 Fla. 420.

Surrender of contract

Plaintiff's uncorroborated and unconvincing testimony that contract for purchase of three tracts of realty entered into by plaintiff and defendant had not been surrendered except so far as necessary to permit plaintiff to become sole purchaser of the one tract would not be accepted as true for purpose of establishing a constructive trust, where plaintiff's testimony was contradicted by defendant and by vendor who was a disinterested witness and was not alleged to have been a party to any fraud against plaintiff.—Hughes v. Helzer, 185 P.2d 537, 182 Or. 205.

ticular elements of a cause of action for the imposition of a constructive trust has also been adjudicated, including such elements as actual or constructive fraud,⁷² circumstances rendering it inequitable for defendant to hold title to property,⁷³ and defendant's receipt or possession of property

structive trusts.⁷⁸

§ 159. Questions of Law and Fact

Issues of fact arising in a suit for the establishment of a constructive trust, relating to the creation, existence, and validity of the trust, should be submitted to the jury or other trier of the facts.

As a general rule, issues of fact arising in a suit for the establishment of a constructive trust, relating to the creation, existence, and validity of the trust, should be submitted to the jury or other

trier of the facts,⁷⁹ by whom, and not by the court, the cogency and convincingness of the evidence is to be determined.⁸⁰ So it may be a question of fact, where the evidence is conflicting, whether there was a promise, agreement, or understanding,⁸¹ whether a conveyance was induced by fraud;⁸² whether a confidential or fiduciary relationship existed between particular persons,⁸³ and was abused or violated;⁸⁴ or whether a person who purchased land at a judicial sale did so as a trustee for those having an interest therein.⁸⁵
